During the working of Monday, June 25, 1584, Kelley was given in vision four blank grids, each of which was twelve squares wide by thirteen squares high. These grids were said to represent the four quarters of the unlettered Great Table of the vision of a few days earlier. As the vision proceeded, “little pricks,” or dots, began to appear in the squares. Kelley was then instructed to connect the dots in groups of seven, which created sigils, each forming a curious pattern.

When he was through connecting the dots, all but eight of the 624 squares that make up the four grids were covered by eighty-eight characters, each unique in form, each covering seven squares, but none of which intruded upon another character's squares. These symbols were identified as “the true images of God his Spiritual Creatures.”

Now we know what those zigzag lines that fill column VI in chapter eighteen's figure 63 are. They are called symmetrical characters because each one is formed from the same number of pricks—in this case, seven.

Once the blank grids were filled with the lines of the symmetrical characters, Kelley was instructed to fill in the squares with letters. Starting at the top left of each grid and moving to the right, letters began to appear to Kelley, one by one, as Dee copied them down. Some of the letters were capitalized, but most were not. A few of the capitalized letters appeared to be written backwards.

When all four grids were filled in with letters and characters, it became clear that the characters spelled out names. Not only that, but each of these eighty-eight names also began with a capital letter and contained no other capital letter among the remaining six.

This phenomenon is in itself impressive, but it is nothing compared to what Dee and Kelley would learn next. Within a few hours (and with a few helpful hints from the angels), the two magicians discovered, to their utter amazement, that the symmetrical characters spelled all but three of the divine names of the ninety-one parts of the earth —names they had been given days earlier and in list format. Figure 67 shows an example of how the divine name of the second part of the earth, Pascomb, is spelled out by its symmetric character.

All four grids were filled with similar characters all spelling out (with a few minor irregularities) the names of eighty-eight of the ninety-one parts of the earth.

The next day the angels tidied up this array by joining the four 12 × 13 grids with a central cross and turning it into one Great Table. The letters of the three missing divine names of the parts of the earth were found distributed in the central cross (sometimes referred to as the Black Cross or the Great Central Cross) and a mysterious ninety-second name, Paraoan, was created from certain of the backwards letters that occupied the squares left vacant by the symmetrical characters (see chapter twenty-four). Things were wrapped up pretty neatly.

Before we continue, I would like to again stress how impressive was the method of reception. Enochian scholar and magician David R. Jones, wrote:

> The student of Enochian can compare the lists of names with the sigils, which formulate their existence on the Watchtowers, and easily see the correlation. But realize that the names were delivered first and then the Watchtowers horizontally line by line and after having both figures at hand. The Angels demonstrated that, by discrete (7 letters, the number of letters in each Governor's name) linear connections, all of the letters given in the Watchtowers could be accounted for from the letters that formulate names of the Governors previously given. This would require either a monumental and complex second and third order memorization (2 dimensions to 1 dimension then back to 2 dimensions and with directional correlation from a 3 dimensional origin to a 3 dimensional conclusion) on Kelly's part or an elaborate and extremely obtuse deception on Dee's part. This constitutes one of the chief proofs of the system.[90]

The magicians would eventually be informed that the ninety-one divine names of the parts of the earth are also the names of ninety-one governors who inhabit the thirty Aethyrs, or Aires, or heavens that surround the Watchtowers like a heavenly glass onion. We've yet to discuss the Aethyrs because their names (see figure 63, column VII) were among the last bits of information Dee and Kelley received in their Enochian magick workings. The lowest of these Aethyrs, Tex, is inhabited by four governors. The remaining Aethyrs including the highest, Lil, each have three governors.

I will talk more about the Aethyrs in chapter twenty-five. Here it is important for us to simply understand that linking the ninety-one parts of the earth to the thirty Aethyrs was the Enochian way of identifying and linking all levels of divine consciousness from bottom to top. Thus, the dynamics of the Great Table really are a demonstration of how everything in heaven and earth is indeed connected to everything else in heaven and earth.

CHAPTER TWENTY-TWO

Tabula Recensa

> At length, E. K. was willed to go down into his Chamber, and I did remain still at our Dineing Table till his return, which was within an hour or somewhat more. And at his return this he brought in writing ….
> —JOHN DEE, APRIL 20, 1587[91]

Such was the amazing genesis of the Great Table. How all this is connected to the vision of the Golden Talisman and the practice of modern Enochian magick will be the subjects of the next chapters. Before moving on, however, and in order to more easily illustrate the structure of the system, I need to temporarily tighten up some of the loose ends that the irregularities in the original material often leave dangling in the eyes of the student. The most serious of these concerns the lettering of the Great Table and the various names of angels drawn therefrom. Here's the problem:

After they initially received the Great Table, the magicians were obliged to change or add certain letters in some of the squares. To confuse things further, in documents they received both earlier and later,[92] the names of a handful of the ninety-one governors of the table (whose names are spelled out by the symmetrical characters) and the names of specific angels drawn from the Watchtowers of the Great Table are in subsequent communications spelled a bit differently than they appear in the original table. This difference has proven very frustrating to modern Enochian magicians, who naturally would like to be confident in their ability to accurately identify and spell the name of the angel with whom they wish to communicate.

There are other loose-end inconsistencies that plagued Dee and Kelley, one of which was the uncertainty over which compass directions were to be assigned to the four quarters of the Great Table—a problem that Dee appears never to have resolved to his satisfaction, and one that I have chosen to sidestep completely by not using the directional references to identify the four quarters of the Great Table at all. These inconsistencies, however, pale before what happened in April of 1587, nearly three years after Dee and Kelley had ended their Enochian workings.

For some reason Kelley felt compelled to revisit the mysteries of the Great Table and once and for all settle the questions of unresolved inconsistencies. During a conversation with the archangel Raphael that lasted approximately one hour, he claimed to receive the Tabula Recensa, or "Reformed Table." This table, while correcting a few of the letters, was characterized by one very dramatic change: three of the quadrants housing the four Watchtowers were shifted to different positions within the full table. This alteration did not change any symmetrical characters, nor did it tinker all that much with the names of the governors or other angels within the table. What it did do was change the basic construction of the Great Table.

For the duration of this book I will, for the sake of consistency, try to use the Tabula Recensa as my main model for both the lettering and arrangement of the Watchtowers of the Great Table. I say "try to use" because for nearly the entire Enochian period the angels referenced the original Great Table (figure 68) when explaining the angelic hierarchies and spelling the names of individual angels. It will be necessary from time to time to refer to the original, unreformed Great Table, especially when we start discussing the Kerubs (see chapters twenty-three and twenty-four), whose names might be dramatically affected by the reformed table's new arrangement.

I should remind the reader that in magick it is eminently possible for many contradictory ideas to be simultaneously true. In the pages that follow, the alert reader will notice that the names of certain angels are spelled in a manner inconsistent with the original Great Table, the Tabula Recensa, and/or other obvious references within the text. It is probable that particular inconsistencies are the result of subsequent angelic instructions or other extenuating reasons. For a practical manual such as this it would be distracting to the point of absurdity for me to pause, footnote, cross reference, defend, and explain each and every one of these aberrations, especially considering the fact that in many instances I myself have not been able to track down the source of the differing lettering. For those of you whose research will take you deeper into this subject, I have included in appendix IV versions of the Watchtowers containing all the variations in lettering that I have been able to discover.

Also for convenience sake, I'm going to represent the segue between the Enochian magick of Dee and Kelley and Enochian magick as it is generally practiced today. Up to this point in the chronology of the adventures of Dee and Kelley, each of the four Watchtowers of the Great Table (both the original and reformed) have been identified by the one of the four Great Seals (see figure 65) or by certain landmark letters. At different times in the original material they have been identified by the order they were received or by the directions: east, south, west, or north. Nowhere in the surviving documents have I been able to find the four quadrants of the Great Table overtly identified as the Elemental Tablets of Fire, Water, Air, and Earth.

That being said, certain clear references in the continuing communications revealed elemental hierarchies and rulerships both of and within the individual Watchtowers. Building on this information, the adepts of the Golden Dawn projected an eminently logical elemental structure to the Great Table, its central Black Cross, and its individual subdivisions. These elemental attributions are the heart and soul of the system of Enochian magick taught and practiced by the Golden Dawn, Aleister Crowley, and most modern practitioners.

I personally believe that when these more modern adepts treated the Watchtowers as expressions of the elements they were picking up where Dee and Kelley had stopped and were taking the next logical step in the development of the system. To more easily discuss how all this is going to relate to the practical application of the system, I will now and for the remainder of this book, refer to the four Watchtowers by their modern elemental designations. Please refer to figure 69.

- The upper left quadrant of the reformed Great Table I will now refer to as the Watchtower, or Elemental Tablet, of Air.
- The upper right quadrant of the reformed Great Table I will now refer to as the Watchtower, or Elemental Tablet, of Water.
- The lower left quadrant of the reformed Great Table I will now refer to as the Watchtower, or Elemental Tablet, of Earth.
- The lower right quadrant of the reformed Great Table I will now refer to as the Watchtower, or Elemental Tablet, of Fire.

This is how they are identified in most modern Enochian literature. There is a fifth Elemental Tablet—the Tablet of Union—that is attributed to the quintessential element, Spirit. It is much smaller, containing only twenty squares, and its letters are drawn from those on the central Black Cross of the Great Table, which serves to unite the four Watchtowers in precisely the same way Spirit is said to unite and separate the four elements. I will have more to say about this very important tablet in chapter twenty-six.

CHAPTER TWENTY-THREE

The Great Table Meets the Golden Talisman

> The Angels of the 4 angles shall make the Earth open unto you, and shall serve your necessities from the 4 parts of the Earth.
> —THE ANGEL AVE, JULY 2, 1584[93]

Recall, from chapter nineteen, that the vision of the Golden Talisman revealed four castles from which flowed four cloths of different colors. Out of each castle, marching in procession came one trumpeter, three ensign bearers, six seniors, and one king. The king was followed by five men (who held up his train) and five crosses (one great cross surrounded by four lesser crosses) that floated in the air above them. Each of the four lesser crosses "had on them, each of them ten, like men, their faces distinctly appearing on the four parts of the Crosse, all over."[94]

After the crosses came sixteen white creatures, identified as dispositors on the Golden Talisman, and then "an infinite number seemed to issue, almost before the four foresaid Castles."[95]

These images and characters provide, at least partially, the key to the divine hierarchy of the Great Table. This hierarchy represents the spiritual forces that govern not only the phenomenal universe but also heaven. Let's take a moment and project the vision of the Golden Talisman upon the Great Table.

The Four Castles

The castles are obviously the four Watchtowers (Elemental Tablets) themselves, and the rest of the characters in the vision represent the angelic hierarchy resident in each tablet. These angels can be called forth and visited in vision by intoning one or more of the first eighteen calls to activate the Elemental Tablet and the specific area of the tablet where they reside. I will show how that is done in appendix I. First, let's see how the cast of characters from the Golden Talisman fit on the individual Elemental Tablets.

For purposes of illustration, I will use the Elemental Tablet of Fire (the lower right quarter of the reformed Great Table) as our model.

The Trumpets (Trumpeter)

The first character to issue from each of the castles was the trumpeter. The trumpeters are the Great Seals of the tablets. In our example (the Elemental Tablet of Fire), the seal is the image of the sun emitting rays.

The Three Ensign Bearers

At the top of the hierarchical ladder of each Elemental Tablet are the three ensign bearers, who represent the Three Great Secret Names of God. These names appear in the central horizontal row of the Great Central Cross that divides each Elemental Tablet. This cross is made of the two vertical columns that bisect the tablet into left and right; the left column is called the Line of the Father and the right column is called the Line of the Son, and the single central row that bisects the tablet top and bottom is called the Line of the Holy Ghost.

Dee and Kelley were told that the three ensign bearers were respectively of the nature of "3, 4, and 5." This means that the Three Great Secret Names of God are spelled using the first three letters, the next four letters, and the final five letters of the central horizontal row of the central cross. In the case of the Fire tablet, these letter combinations are: oiP, tea, pDoce.

If there was any doubt as to the angels' meaning concerning the four sets of the Three Great Secret Names of God, they thoughtfully provided a round diagram with all twelve names neatly represented as ensign flags surrounding a central quartered square. In that diagram, all the letters of the names appeared in uppercase letters: OIP, TEAA, PDOCE.

The Three Great Secret Names of all four Elemental Tablets are found in appendix IV.

The Six Seniors

Next came the six seniors. While there is little specific indication in the surviving documents that would suggest the six seniors carry planetary attributions, it is nonetheless a logical assumption; it was made by the adepts of the Golden Dawn and is made by most modern practitioners. For clarity of reference (and for the duration of our discussion), I will adapt the modern planetary designations given to the seniors.

The six seniors of each of the Elemental Tablets are found on the Great Central Cross of each tablet. The seven-letter names of the six seniors radiate from the center two letters of the cross to its extremities.

On the Elemental Tablet of Fire, the six seniors are: aaetPio (Mars), adoeoet (Jupiter), aLndVod (Luna), aapDoce (Venus), arinna (Saturn), and a*Nodoin* (Mercury).

In subsequent references to the seniors (such as in lists and prayers), Dee would standardize the capitalization of the names on all the Elemental Tablets. In our example: Aaetpio, Adoeoet, Alndvod, Aapdoce, Arinna, Anodoin.

The names of the seniors of all four Elemental Tablets are found in appendix IV.

In Kelley's vision of the Golden Talisman, the six seniors from each of the four castles march to the center and meet as pillars that support, as it were, the entire structure. This image is suggestive of the twenty-four elders who surround the throne of God in the Book of the Revelation of John.[96] The twenty-four seniors together are represented on the Golden Talisman as the twenty-four columns that ring the center circle of the talisman (see figure 64).

There is a seventh planetary senior who is attributed to the sun. Just as the sun is the central "king" of our solar system, so too is the sun senior identified as king and found in the center of each Elemental Tablet.

The King

Like the sun, which attracts and holds the planets in orbit, the king of each Elemental Tablet is said to summon and direct the seniors for heavenly duties. When those duties are of a merciful nature, the king spells his name a bit differently than when the duties are those of severity and judgment.

Like those of the six seniors, the seven letters of the king's name are drawn entirely from the Great Central Cross (the lines of the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost) of the Elemental Tablet. Beginning with the fifth letter from the left in the horizontal line of the Holy Ghost, the name is spelled out in a clockwise whirl that ends in one of the two squares that occupies the center of the cross: either at the sixth letter from the left for operations of mercy (figure 75) or the seventh letter from the left for operations of judgment (figure 76).

In the case of the Elemental Tablet of Fire, the letters that hold those positions are both *a*s, so both names are Edlprna.

Figures 75 and 76: Clockwise whirl spelling the two names of the king of the Elemental Tablet of Fire, Edlprna and Edlprna

Perhaps my use of the Elemental Tablet of Fire is not the best example to illustrate how the name of the king is formed by the clockwise whirls because the resulting names are the same. The other three Elemental Tablets yield distinctly different names.

The names of the Kings of all four Elemental Tablets are found in appendix IV.

The Five Crosses (One Great Cross and Four Lesser Crosses)

Each of the four quarters formed by the Great Central Cross is a rectangle five squares wide by six squares high. These quadrants are often referred to in modern Enochian magick as lesser angles or subangles. Just as the reformed Great Table positions the Elemental Tablet of Air in its upper left, Water in its upper right, Earth in its lower left, and Fire in its lower right quadrants, so too each subangle is assigned one of the four elements and positioned on its Elemental Tablet in the same way.

Each of the four subangles is dominated by a Calvary cross made up of ten squares (the ten men of the vision of the Golden Talisman), which form the two god names of the subangle. The name drawn from the six letters of the vertical column of the cross (read top to bottom) was said to summon the angels of the subangle, and the five-letter god name of the horizontal bar of the cross (read left to right) was said to command them. Figure 78 shows the god names rzionr and nrzfm from the Fire subangle (the lower right quadrant) of the Elemental Tablet of Fire.

Sixteen White Creatures (Dispositors)

Next in procession in Kelley's vision (and next in the hierarchy of the Elemental Tablets) are the “16 white Creatures.” On the Golden Talisman diagram they are represented as sixteen small columns standing side-by-side at the extremity of each rectangular cloth (see figure 64) where they are labeled “XVI Dispositors.”

Among modern magicians there are several schools of thought concerning the identity of the sixteen dispositors. The simplest (and in my opinion the most correct) theory holds they are made up of the four angels who reside beneath the arms of the Calvary cross of each of the four subangles of the Elemental Tablet. Referred to as good angels or servient angels, they are invoked and commanded by the god names of their Calvary cross and have powers and knowledge that can be of great practical use to the magician (see appendix IV).

The names of the servient or good angels can be spelled with four letters (if you omit the central letter from the vertical bar of the Calvary cross) or with five letters (if you include the letter from the cross). In our example, the names are:

adre or ad[i]re
sisp or si[o]sp pali or pa[n]li ACar or AC[r]ar

This is a logical and very workable way of looking at the angelic hierarchy of the Elemental Tablet and conforms nicely to the vision of the Golden Talisman and to the way Dee composed his prayers to conjure these good angels.

This theory does, however, leave out in the cold the four letters above the arm of each Calvary cross. To address this issue we must bring up the several schools of thought concerning Kerubs.

Kerubic Angels

In Christian iconography, every well-appointed crucifix bears a rectangular piece of wood nailed above the head of Christ and displaying the four letters INRI.[97] So too above the arms of the Calvary cross of every subangle we find four letters that spell the name of the Kerub of the subangle, a unique spiritual personage. The Golden Dawn dubbed these angels Kerubs.[98]

Now, if you are paying attention, you might want to point out that there are only four subangles and only four Calvary crosses (one in each Elemental Tablet), and therefore there should only be four Kerub/dispositors, not sixteen, per tablet. Of course, your observation would be accurate—if we restrict ourselves to spelling their names in a straightforward and orderly manner. But according to this theory, there are actually four Kerubs hidden in the four letters above the arms of every Calvary cross, and these sixteen Kerubs are actually the sixteen dispositors.

Let's use the Fire (lower right) subangle of the Fire Elemental Tablet and the Kerub ZiZa as our example.

This subangle's four Kerubs are created from a simple permutation of the four letters above the arms of the Calvary cross; simply slide the four letters to the left, each time placing the displaced first letter to the back of the line:

ZiZa iZaZ ZaZi aZiZ

This dynamic perpetual motion of letters doesn't stop with the Kerub, for each letter of the Kerub's name can also rule a column and row of the sixteen letters of the servient angels residing beneath the arm of the Calvary cross.

In our example, the first Z in the Kerub's name rules the column directly beneath it and the arm of the cross: aspA.

The Z also rules the bottom row of the subangle: ACar.

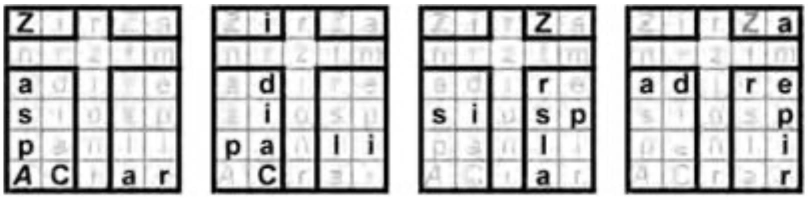

Figure 81: How the letters of the Kerub rule the servient angels of the Fire subangle: The first Z rules column name aspA and row name ACar. The letter I rules column name diaC and row name pali. The second Z rules column name rsla and row name sisp. And finally, the letter a rules column name epir and row name adre.

According to this theory, in order to open a subangle to summon or contact a servient angel, the magician must first invoke the two god names of the Calvary cross of the subangle in question, then invoke the Kerub, then invoke the servient angel of choice. This is a logical and workable system, but one that doesn't appear to have been on Dee and Kelley's menu. In fact, original material suggests that the Kerub is a unique citizen of the subangle, one who is not under the rulership of the Calvary cross, but under a “god” whose name begins with a sacred letter drawn from the Black Cross (the Great Central Cross) of the Great Table.

A Super Kerub?

Neither Dee or Kelley nor the modern magicians of the Golden Dawn ever use the term Super Kerub.

There is, however, a variety of kerubic angel who seems to embody that title. Like the variety of kerubs we've just discussed, the names of the Super Kerubs are drawn from the letters above the arms of the Calvary crosses of the subangles of the Great Tablet. But, instead of answering to the two Calvary cross god names of their subangle, the Super Kerubs answer to a higher authority—a supercharged angel who is linked directly to the Black Cross of the unreformed Great Tablet. This angel was the subject of much discussion in the original Dee and Kelley material, for its existence and posers were central to the understanding of the “wicked” angels.

In order for us to understand the nature of the Super Kerubs and the wicked angels, we will need to take a closer look at the Black Cross.

CHAPTER TWENTY-FOUR

The Black Cross, Super Kerubs, Wicked Angels, Missing Symmetrical Characters, and the Tablet of Union

> That shall make the cross that bindeth the 4 Angles of the Table together. The same that stretcheth from the left to right, must also stretch from the right to the left …
> —The angel Ave, June 25, 1584[99]

I stated earlier that I have been unable to find in the surviving Dee and Kelley material any overt references to the four Watchtowers as being Elemental Tablets of Fire, Water, Air, and Earth. However, the communicating angels gave every indication that the dynamics and hierarchical structure of the Great Table were, at least in part, elemental in nature. In the communication of Monday, June 25, 1584, the angel Ave speaks of the virtues of the table:[100]

First, generally this Table containeth:

1. All humane knowledge.
2. Out of it springeth Physick.
3. The knowledge of all elemental Creatures, amongst you. How many kindes there are, and for what use they were created. Those that live in the air, by themselves. Those that live in the waters, by themselves. Those that dwell in the earth, by themselves. The property of the fire—which is the secret life of all things.
4. The knowledge, finding and use of Metal.
   The vertues of them.
   They are all of one matter. The congelations, and vertues of Stones.} They are all of one matter.
5. The conjoining and knitting together of Natures. The destraction of Nature, and of things may perish.
6. Moving from place to place, [as, into this Country, or that Country at pleasure.]
7. The knowledge of all crafts Mechanical.
8. Transmutatio formalis, sed non effentialis.[101]

If we look at the four quarters of the Great Table as being the Elemental Tablets of Air, Water, Earth, and Fire, the Black Cross that separates and joins the tablets would then obviously represent Spirit—that quintessential force that binds the four elements together in infinite quantities and ratios to create and sustain the universe, while at the same time keeping the elements separated just enough to retain their identities. This push/pull, active/passive nature is a defining characteristic of Spirit. As I mentioned earlier, this characteristic is illustrated (as every good ceremonial magician knows) by the dynamics of the pentagram, which allow for two types of Spirit pentagram, one active and one passive.

The Black Cross contains forty letters that radiate from the central blank square. When we read from the top of the column toward the center, we find the curiously spaced and inconsistently capitalized letters e xarp and h Coma. When we start at the center square of the Black Cross and read to the right, we find the letters nanTa and bitom.

We can find identical sets of letters if we read from the bottom of the column toward the center and from the center of the row to the left. In other words, the Black Cross contains mirror images of the letter groups e xarp, h Coma, nanTa, and bitom—a phenomenon curiously reflective of the dual nature of Spirit.

During the same June 25 session, Ave would (in remarkably few words) explain the letters on the Black Cross, answer questions concerning the three missing symmetrical characters of the tenth Aire (Lexarph, Comanan, and Tabitom—the twenty-eighth, twenty-ninth, and thirtieth parts of the earth; see chapter eighteen, figure 63), and demonstrate how those three names construct a master table, the Tablet of Union, which appears to rule the whole Great Table.

But before discussing all that, we have a small bit of unfinished business to clean up from the last chapter. I am, of course, talking about the Super Kerubs and the wicked angels.

Super Kerubs, or Gods of the Kerubs?

It is my opinion, and I'm sure many will disagree, that there are two hierarchies of angels existing simultaneously in each subangle. The first hierarchy simply begins with the two god names of the Calvary cross, who are invoked before calling upon the four servient angels whose names appear beneath the arm of the cross. In this schema, all the names of the angels in the hierarchy are drawn neatly and exclusively from within the subangle itself. The Kerub plays no role at all.

The second hierarchy, I believe, does not use the two god names of the Calvary cross at all, nor does it necessarily concern itself with the servient angels. Instead, it places a new character, a Super Kerub, or kerubic god, above a group of angels whose names are drawn exclusively from the four letters above the arms of the cross.

Figure 82 is a version of the original, unreformed Great Table that I've highlighted to, hopefully, make this all clear. I realize it may sound crazy for us to bounce back to using the unreformed table when locating these angels, but it is the unreformed table the angels used in 1584 when this information was received. For the moment, please ignore the circled backwards letters on the diagram.

The letters of the Black Cross are the key to creating the kerubic gods. Note how four of the letters in the column are isolated from others that appear neatly in groups of four. Reading from the top toward the center, the e of e xarp and the h of h Coma are isolated. Reading from the bottom toward the center, the p of exar p and the a of hCom a are also isolated. Note that these four isolated letters appear in the same rows as the Kerubs who live above the arms of the Calvary crosses of all sixteen subangles.

To determine the name of a subangle's kerubic god, simply insert the isolated letter (that appears on the same row as the Kerub's name) at the beginning of the Kerub's four-letter name. For example, the Kerub of the Fire subangle of the Fire tablet, ZiZa, would be transformed into the Super Kerub, pZiZa (see figure 80). Instead of ruling the servient angels, this Super Kerub pZiZa directly rules four angels whose names are created by the permutation of the Kerub's own name: ZiZa, iZaZ, ZaZi, and aZiZ. A table containing all the kerubic gods and their Kerubs can be found in appendix IV.

The important thing to remember is that in this system there are two hierarchies of angels in each of the sixteen subangles: one hierarchy that simply uses the god name of the Calvary cross to summon or contact the serviant angels living under the arms of the cross, and one hierarchy that selects a letter from the Black Cross (outside the Elemental Tablet) and adds it to the Kerub's name to create a kerubic god who rules four Kerubs whose names are created by the permutation of the regular Kerub's own name.

When to use one hierarchy and not the other in a magical operation remains a subject of debate among modern magicians. One thing is certain, the more the magician understands about the nature and dynamics of the Great Table, the more he or she will be able to devise a logical and workable mode. So let's discover more wonders of the Black Cross. Let's start with something we haven't encountered before in Enochian magick—wicked angels.

Wicked Angels

The letters of the Black Cross are also the key to creating the names of the four wicked, or evil or malevolent, angels of each subangle. Up to now we've been dealing with angels whose names are representative of complete and balanced segments of the Great Table and its Elemental Tablets. But during the June 25 session, as the angel Ave was expounding on the virtues of the Black Cross, he also introduced Dee and Kelley to a set of angels that are not complete and balanced—angels he referred to as being "wicked." These malevolent angels manifest aversely the powers of their good-angel subangle neighbors. For example, if the good angels are useful for healing, the wicked angels bring sickness and affliction (see appendix IV).

But some of the wicked angel duties seem rather tempting and are said to be useful in obtaining money and for gambling. Kelley initially got pretty excited about such prospects and was very disappointed when Ave in no uncertain terms told him hands off the evil angels. Why Ave would give details of these critters and turn around and tell the magicians not to use them remains a mystery. Or does it?

The name of an evil angel is a portrait of incompleteness and imbalance supercharged with an injection of the immense power of the Black Cross—a dangerous recipe if there ever was one. Creating it is very simple. Here's how to do it.

Remember how we created the name of a kerubic god by prefacing the name of a regular Kerub with the letter from the Black Cross occupying the same row? Well, that's almost exactly what we do to create the name of a wicked angel. However, instead of prefacing the four letters of a Kerub's name, we preface only the first two letters of the servient angel's name with its neighboring letter from the Black Cross. This three-letter supercharged perversion of the first half of a servient angel's name is a wicked angel.

And how does one, if one were inclined, call forth these evil angels? Who are their hierarchical rulers? As one might expect, the adverse god names that call forth the evil angels are the names on the Calvary cross spelled backwards. In the case of our example they are iOpgna and xanNu.

You can easily work out the names of the other evil angels and their rulers by referring to figure 82 or consulting the table in appendix IV.

Paraoan

Ave was particularly concerned that Dee and Kelley locate the name Paraoan on the Great Table. The significance of this great angel has not (at least to my satisfaction) been adequately explored or explained. The name Paraoan first appeared among the ninety-one parts of the earth as one of the three divine names (number 65) in the twenty-second Aire. Paraoan is the divine name of the part of the earth designated as Marmarica. According to Enochian scholar Robin Cousins, in Dee and Kelley's day, Marmarica was a North African coastal region straddling the Egyptian and Libyan coasts, bounded on the east by the River Nile (see appendix III).

Oddly enough, a perfectly good sixty-fifth symmetrical character already existed. It is found in the lower right section of the Elemental Tablet of Water, and spells the name Laxdizi.

Nevertheless, Paraoan seems to also hold the title of the sixty-fifth part of the earth known as Marmarica. The obvious and inescapable similarity between the names Marmarica and America inserts (into my mind at least) an added dimension of mystery to this curious anomaly. Add to this the enigmatic and direful comments Ave made concerning the final n in Paraoan:

> As far as that N. stretcheth in the Character, so far shall that Countrey be consumed with fire, and swallowed into Hell, as Sodom was for wickednesse. The end of all things is even at hand: and the earth must be purified, and delivered to another.[102]
> A bit later, Dee presses Ave on this:
> Dee: I beseech you say somewhat of the N in Paraoan, of which you said, so far as that stretched, should sink to hell.
> Ave: Every letter in Paraoan, is a living fire: but all of one quality and of one Creation. But unto N is delivered a viol of Destruction, according to that part that he is of Paraoan the Governour.[103]

The letters of the name Paraoan are created from seven of the eight backward letters that appear scattered among the four Elemental Tablets of the Great Table. See the circled letters in figure 82. The eighth backwards letter, the backward L found in the lowermost square on the right of figure 82, has another very important job to do.

The Three Missing Symmetrical Characters of the Tenth Aire

Recall from the table in chapter eighteen (figure 63) that there were no symmetrical characters for the three parts of the earth assigned to the tenth Aire (those whose divine names were Lexarph, Comanan, and Tabitom). Neither can these three names be found within the available letters in any of the four Elemental Tablets. They are, however, to be found on the Black Cross, and the angel Ave, in his highly productive lecture of June 25, 1584, shows how it is done.

Ave instructed Dee and Kelley to pluck the backward capital L from the lower right corner of the lower right Watchtower (I've circled it in figure 82) and preface the lowercase letters e, x, a, r, p, and h from the column of the Black Cross to form dual versions of the divine name Lexarph.

Then starting with the capital letter C in the column, moving down from the top C (or up from the bottom C), then continuing to read either right or left into the horizontal row, dual versions of the divine name Comanan are formed.

Then, starting with the capital letter T in the left and right arms of the Black Cross and reading toward the extremities, we discover dual versions of the divine name Tabitom.

Lexarph, Comanan, and Tabitom are respectively the divine names of the twenty-eighth, twenty-ninth, and thirtieth parts of the earth in the tenth Aire, whose symmetrical characters were missing from the original material concerning the ninety-one parts of the earth. Their characters are simply the straight lines and rotating *L*s that spell out their names on the Black Cross.

Obviously, angelic beings whose names are drawn from the Black Cross are of a nature that sets them apart from their neighbors in the Elemental Tablets. Their presence in the tenth Aire also distinguishes that portion of the ninety-one parts of the earth for special attention—something that will be important to us later.

The Four Names of the Tablet of Union

Lexarph, Comanan, and Tabitom also contain within themselves the four names that appear in pairs on the Black Cross, names that are very familiar to practicing Enochian magicians: EXARP, HCOMA, NANTA, and BITOM. These are the four divine names of the elements that (in the practice of modern Enochian magick at least) rule the four Elemental Tablets.

These four names are arranged into a table five squares wide by four squares high. This Tablet of Union, in its profound simplicity, extracts the essence and hierarchical dynamics of the entire Great Table. The Tablet of Union is quite literally the Great Table distilled.

We'll soon learn much more about the Tablet of Union. But first, we are almost ready to bring the story of Dee and Kelley's Enochian period to an end. It was not long after Ave's revelations concerning the Black Cross, Kerubs, wicked angels, missing symmetrical characters, and the Tablet of Union that the two magicians' great angelic adventure, for all intents and purposes, came to a close. There remained only a couple of loose ends to tie up. But my heavens, what loose ends those were!

CHAPTER TWENTY-FIVE

“There Is All.”

> Nalvage is called away and cannot be in Action with you until Wednesday. Then shall you have the Calls that you look for. And so enter into the knowledge and perfect understanding of the 49 Gates and Tables if you will.
> —THE ARCHANGEL GABRIEL, MONDAY, JULY 9, 1584[104]

In early July of 1584, the two magicians were busy trying to tie up loose ends before a mysterious August deadline. On July 7, the angel Ave waxed eloquent about how Enoch made tablets such as those Dee and Kelley now possessed, and had labored fifty days in prayer and confession before receiving a supreme revelation. It appears from the communication[105] that the two magicians were to do likewise.

In a breathtakingly short amount of time, Dee and Kelley received the translations of the remaining angelic calls (five through eighteen), which they had six weeks earlier received in the angelic tongue, together with tantalizing hints that the eighteen calls might be connected to the Tablet of Union and the four Elemental Tablets.

On Thursday, July 12, the angel Ilemese[106] began to deliver a nineteenth call, together with its translation. This call was said to be actually thirty calls, bringing the total number of calls to forty-eight. Add the unexpressed “first” call (see chapter sixteen), and we have a grand total of forty-nine (7 × 7) calls. The next day, Friday the thirteenth, 1584, John Dee's fifty-seventh birthday, Ilemese delivered the remaining portion of the nineteenth call and revealed that it was the key to accessing the thirty Aires (the heavens connected to the ninety-one parts of the earth). Lastly, he revealed the names of the thirty Aires, which until then had only been identified by numbers (see chapter nineteen, figure 63, columns I and VI).

The nineteenth call was a master call to be used to access each of the thirty Aires or Aethyrs. The only thing that differentiated the thirty calls from one another was insertion of the name of the particular Aire in the first line. Ilemese delivered the names of the Aires as a simple list and then engaged in a brief exchange with Dee.

Dee's testiness evoked a response from none other than the archangel Gabriel, who was sitting nearby in Kelley's vision during Ilemese's discourse. The great angel stood and informed the magicians they now possessed the knowledge they needed. He encouraged them to study and prepare for the August operation and then, after one more little jab at Dee's cheekiness, delivered a most poignant valediction.

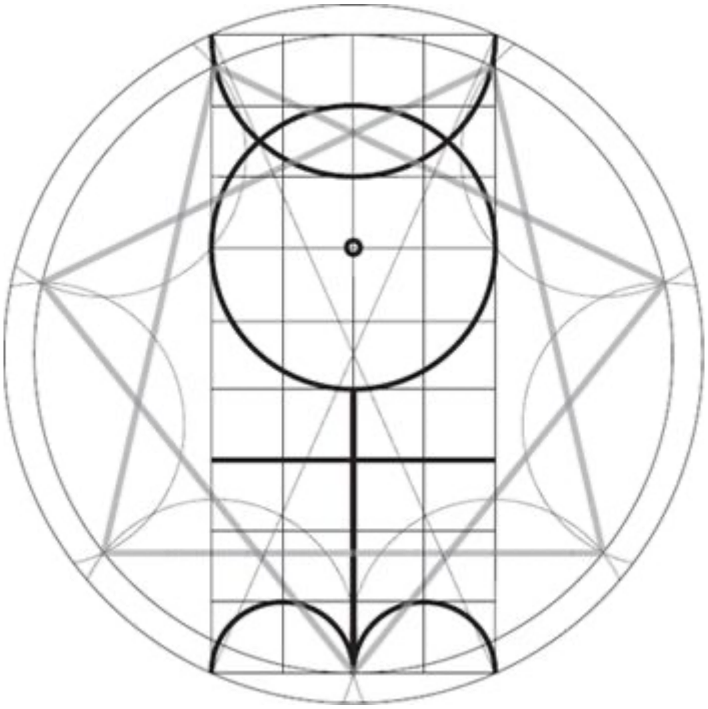
> E.K. Now they both be gone in a great flame of fire upwards … [108]

Thus, in a dramatic burst of flame, the angels of Enochian magick fell silent, and the most amazing magical operation ever recorded came to an end. Unfortunately, we don't know if the two magicians actually performed the fifty-day operation scheduled for August. Surviving diary entries for the month treat on other matters. What we are left with, however, is an elegant and remarkably coherent system of vision magick.

For those of us who have made Enochian magick a part of our spiritual quest, Gabriel's parting words ring profoundly true. God did keep promise with Dee and Kelley and delivered unto them (and us) the keys to the storehouses wherein we shall find, if we enter wisely, humbly, and patiently, treasures worth more than the frames of the heavens.

BOOK V

Putting It Together



CHAPTER TWENTY-SIX

Rulership of the Tablet of Union

> The Tablet of Union is a Great Table you can put in your briefcase; but EHNB is a Tablet of Union you can put in your pocket.
> —LON MILO DUQUETTE

I have purposefully placed this brief overview of practical Enochian vision magick after the chronology of Dee and Kelley's great Enochian adventure. I do so because Enochian vision magick as it is generally practiced today is a system that depends heavily on innovations that were developed long after the great magicians passed into history. Not that I think that modern Enochian magick is an affront to the memories of these two giants of magick. But I do think it is important for us to know the difference between the foundational material and the structures that have later been built upon it.

I think it is also important to remember that there is nothing particularly sacrosanct about the methods and techniques developed by the Golden Dawn, Crowley, or any other latter-day magicians. As an informed and competent magician, you are just as free as these individuals were and are to develop your own Enochian magick art form based and structured on your personal interpretation and understanding of Dee and Kelley's experiences and material. After all, in order for you to justly claim the title of magician you must be a magician, not merely a one-man or one-woman Society for Creative Anachronism dedicated to simply recreating the lives and works of real magicians of the past.

Enochian vision magick as practiced today can be divided into two broad categories: elemental and aethyric. Both require the ability to scry and to keep a faithful written record of one's workings. Scrying the Aethyrs has, in my later years, become the focus of most of my Enochian operations, because that process deals most directly with the current state of my personal initiatory career—by that I mean my personal transformational process, my spiritual journey, the lifting of my consciousness.

However, it has not always been so. Indeed, I would never encourage any magician, especially in the early stages of his or her Enochian career, to neglect either branch of Enochian exploration. I spent many years honing my visionary skills by exploring the elemental worlds that not only make up my physical, mental, and emotional environment but also actually represent everything that my limited senses tell me is me.

It is the elemental branch of Enochian vision magick that I will first discuss. To help me do this, I'm going to talk briefly about the structure of another great magical tool, the tarot.

Rulership of the Tablet of Union

The classic tarot image of the Magician shows the magician standing behind a table, upon which are four magical tools; a wand, a cup, a sword, and a disk. These are the four elemental weapons of the magician. They represent respectively the four suits of the tarot and the elements Fire, Water, Air, and Earth.

The master card of each suit is the ace. The ace is the “Spirit” of the suit—the “Spirit” of the element. The other cards in the suit are given life by the spirit of the ace. They are essentially subdivisions, components, and aspects of the ace—they all “live” inside the ace.

If we put an ace under a magick microscope, we would first see that it is composed of four major components.[109] These are the four court cards (commonly titled king, queen, prince, and princess) that represent respectively the elements Fire, Water, Air, and Earth. For example, if we put the Ace of Wands (Fire) under our magick microscope, we would see that it was composed of the King of Wands (the fiery aspect of Fire), the Queen of Wands (the watery aspect of Fire), the Prince of Wands (the airy aspect of Fire), and the Princess of Wands (the earthy aspect of Fire).

In the Enochian model, we can actually see Spirit's influence inter-penetrating the heart and every quadrant of the Elemental Tablet in the form of the Great Central Cross and the Calvary crosses of the subangles. The Black Cross of the Great Table reveals Spirit's influence on an even larger scale. It literally holds together and separates the four Elemental Tablets. The Black Cross is like the ace of aces. All this is expressed most simply and elegantly in the Tablet of Union.

I draw your attention to figure 85 and the four rows of names in the Tablet of Union.

▽	H	C	O	M	A
🜃	N	A	N	T	A
△	B	I	T	O	M

Recall that Exarp, Hcoma, Nanta, and Bitom are the four names found in pairs on the Black Cross of the Great Table. In modern Enochian magick, these Black Cross letters represent the element Spirit. The four names on the Tablet of Union are not merely the master keys to the elemental universe—they are the elemental universe.

Starting with the top row, we see that EXARP is the elemental world of Air; HCOMA the world of Water; NANTA, Earth; and BITOM, Fire.[110] (Note the little symbols of the elements to the left of each row of names.)

Now let's look at the five columns of the Tablet of Union. The left-most column is made from the four first letters of the names, giving us the name EHNB. At the top of this column is a little circle with spokes inside. This is the symbol of Spirit. It tells us that EHNB is the column of Spirit and the essence of the entire tablet.

Obviously, the angelic entity described by the letters EHNB is profoundly powerful. It is a name that represents and contains within itself the entire Great Table and all the angelic forces within it. E represents the entire the Elemental Tablet of Air, H the Elemental Tablet of Water, N the Elemental Tablet of Earth, and B the Elemental Tablet of Fire.

In a real sense, the remaining sixteen letters all live inside EHNB in just the same way the sixteen court cards of the tarot live inside their aces. Put E under a microscope and see the letters XARP. Put H under a microscope and see COMA. Put N under a microscope and see ANTA. Put B under a microscope and see ITOM.

As we move right, the next column is XCAI, whose letters represent the four Air subangles of the four Elemental Tablets and all the resident angels inside the Air subangles. (XCAI would be the four princes of the tarot.)

AONT does the same for the Water subangles (queens of the tarot), RMTO for the Earth subangles (princesses of the tarot), and PAAM for the Fire subangles (kings of the tarot).

Now are you starting to see the power resident in the Tablet of Union? If we were to call EXARP, HCOMA, NANTA, and BITOM archangels of the elements, then we would have to say that EHNB is the archangel of archangels of the elements. The Tablet of Union is a Great Table you can put in your briefcase, but EHNB is a Tablet of Union you can put in your pocket.

The Tablet of Union and the four Elemental Tablets are activated and penetrated in vision by intoning one or two of the first eighteen calls in the angelic tongue. I give details showing how this is done in appendix II, but here is a brief overview:

The first two calls are dedicated to the Tablet of Union exclusively and are never used to call or visit the angels of the Elemental Tablets.

The next four calls (three through six) deal with the angels of the individual letters of EXARP, HCOMA, NANTA, and BITOM, and/or are used to activate and penetrate the native subangles of the Elemental Tablets. (A native subangle is the subangle of an Elemental Tablet that represents the same element as the Elemental Tablet—e.g., the Air Subangle of the Air Tablet, the Water Subangle of the Water Tablet.)

The next twelve calls (seven through eighteen) are used to activate and penetrate the remaining three subangles of the Elemental Tablets. How these calls are allotted to the various subangles is an exercise in routine hermetic logic.

As I mentioned earlier, it is not necessary for you to have elaborate or expensive models of the Elemental Tablets and the Tablet of Union in order to perform Enochian magick. But it is important that you have a good understanding of them and have the equipment “installed” in your mind. When I work with the angels of the Elemental Tablets or the Tablet of Union, I simply have my four colored Elemental Tablets (positioned as they appear in the reformed Great Table) on a table before me and place my small Tablet of Union on the top of them in the center.

Now on to the business of actually doing Enochian vision magick.

CHAPTER TWENTY-SEVEN

Elemental Workings, Temple Openings, and Addressing the Hierarchies

Sylphs and Gnomes and Undines too, Salamanders beckon you …

—"THEME FROM MOUNT OREAD"[111]

Why on earth would anyone wish to call upon an angel of the elements? What can a salamander (Fire elemental) do for me? When does an undine (Water elemental) come in handy? Does a sylph (Air elemental) really look like Tinkerbell? Are gnomes (Earth elementals) really grumpy? Is exploration of the elements a necessary prerequisite to higher magical workings?

As I wrote in the prologue, the question of, "why magick?" is one that is not easily answered. The supreme goal of the magician is spiritual enlightenment and liberation of the soul. Do I expect to accomplish that end through the aid of elemental spirits?

Not directly. But the elementals are a part of my world, a part of my being. They move within me and around me. They dwell among themselves in their infinite number, ratios, and proportions. "Know Thyself" was chiseled above the doors of the ancient temples of initiation. How can I know myself when the mysteries of the elements of my own heart and soul remain undiscovered?

Enochian elemental magick is not a matter of calling up a spirit to command it to do a job for you, to cause the girl next door to fall in love with you, to bewitch your neighbor's cow, or to kill an enemy at a distance. Instead, when you visit an Enochian elemental angel in vision, you are exploring a specific aspect of creation, a highly specialized area of which the angel is the visual and metaphoric embodiment. You see things the way they are in that narrow quadrant of the universe. Once armed with the insights these spiritual specialists can provide, you are better prepared to know how to go about causing the girl next door to fall in love with you or bewitching your neighbor's cow. (I understand that killing at a distance is less satisfying than one might imagine.)

Does this really help the magician? First and most obviously, it broadens his or her understanding of how the spirit world is the subjective and underlying reality of the objective world. Just as the educated and seasoned traveler is better equipped than the novice to understand rewards and pitfalls of world travel, a magician experienced with elemental work is endowed with a greater understanding of existence. That in and of itself is a spiritual reward.

But more than that, each willed encounter with the angels of the elements activates, readjusts, and rebalances the magician's own internal elemental components. Like the computer user who periodically defragments the hard drive of his or her computer in order to make things to run more efficiently, the magician is changed and (hopefully) improved with every thoughtful and seriously examined elemental encounter.

At our Monday night magick class, we've developed a series of simple questions we first ask every angel we call from an Elemental Tablet. Just as we would not expect any two computer hard drives to be fragmented in exactly the same way, no two magicians should expect the exact same answers to these questions. Here are a few of them. The first questions are the simplest yet most important:

- What is your name? (Confirm you have who you've called.)
- What is your nature?

The next questions deal with how the angel is perceived by the human senses:

- What is your color?
- What is your sound (musical note, if possible)?
- How do you feel to the human touch?
- What do you taste like?
- How do you smell?

The next questions deal with how the angel makes itself known to us through our thoughts and emotions:

- How do I express you through emotions?
- In what form of images and ideas are you most revealed to me?
- When are you most manifest in my daily life?

Other questions could concern things more specific to one's own personal magical issues, but I think you get the picture.

Now that we know a little more about why to practice Enochian elemental magick, let's look at how to do it. It is likely that my opinion on this subject will be slightly at odds with a number of practicing Enochian magicians. It is even more certain to receive condemnation by legions of others who don't actually perform Enochian magick but instead enjoy speculating how Enochian magicians should operate.

Dee and Kelley contacted the angels by praying. Boy, did they pray! There is nothing in the surviving records that suggests that they performed banishing rituals, drew pentagrams or hexagrams in the air, made knocks or magical gestures, or called upon the strings of classic qabalistic Hebrew divine names from the sephiroth of the Tree of Life. The operating procedures of the Golden Dawn and Crowley, however, do all those things and more.

Here is an example of a Golden Dawn–style temple opening appropriate for working with the Elemental Table of Earth. It is a ceremony that incorporates ritual components from the GD's neophyte degree, the grade that represents Malkuth, the tenth and lowest sephirah on the Tree of Life. As you can see, the ritual invokes the qabalistic hierarchy of divine names, archangels, and angels traditionally attributed to Malkuth and the element Earth.

The Opening of the Temple in the Grade of 1° = 10□

Give the Sign of the God SET fighting.

Purify with Fire and Water, and announce

“The Temple is cleansed. ”

Knock.

“Let us adore the Lord and King of Earth! Adonai ha Aretz, Adonai Melehk, unto Thee be the Kingdom, the Sceptre, and the Splendour: Malkuth, Geburah, Gedulah, The Rose of Sharon and the Lily of the Valley, Amen!”

Sprinkle Salt before Earth tablet.

“Let the Earth adore Adonai!”

Make the Invoking Hexagram of Saturn.

Make the Invoking Pentagram of Spirit Passive and pronounce …

“AHIH AGLA NANTA”

Make the Invoking Pentagram of Earth, and pronounce …

“ADNI MLK.” And Elohim said: “Let us make Man in Our own image; and let them have dominion over the Fish of the Sea and over the Fowl of the Air; and over every creeping thing that creepeth upon the Earth. And the Elohim created ATh-h-ADAM: in the image of the Elohim created They them; male and female created They them. In the Name of ADNI MLK, and of the Bride and Queen of the Kingdom; Spirits of Earth, adore your Creator!”

Make the Sign of Taurus.

“In the Name of Auriel, great archangel of Earth, Spirits of Earth, adore your Creator!”

Make the Cross.

> "In the Names and Letters of the Great Northern Quadrangle, Spirits of Earth, adore your Creator!"
> Sprinkle water before Earth Tablet.
>
> "In the three great secret Names of God, MOR, DIAL, HCTGA, that are borne upon the Banners of the North, Spirits of Earth, adore your Creator!"
>
> "In the name of ICZHIHA, great king of the North, Spirits of Earth, adore your Creator! In the Name of Adonai Ha-Aretz, I declare that the Spirits of Earth have been duly invoked."

For many modern Enochian magicians, rituals such as this qabalistically formatted degree opening ceremony are perfect vehicles for establishing the proper elemental environment in which to operate. For years they were an indispensable part of my operating procedure as well. I discontinued, however, about ten years ago.

As we myopically focus on the fascinating intricacies of different magical systems, we often forget the big picture and the fact that we have only one universe to play with. There is no such thing as a separate qabalistic magick universe, or a separate Solomonic magick universe, or a separate Enochian magick universe. These various systems simply oblige us to view the same universe from different angles. Granted, when we look from differing points of view, we see certain similarities. After all, it's the same universe. There are certain to be recognizable landmarks. But we can't expect the structure of one system's point of view to neatly match or define the other.

It is my opinion that the spiritual forces inherent in Enochian magick are expressed units of living consciousness that reflect a uniquely structured and organized point of view of the universe—one that the communicating angels obliged Dee and Kelley to build from scratch. It is a perfect, self-referential system of looking at things that cannot be expected to be consistently compatible with other self-referential systems.

With all due respect to the knowledgeable and eloquent magicians who created the above temple opening, I believe that (unless your sensitivities as a magical artist demands it) most of it is completely unnecessary in order for you to properly activate an Elemental Tablet and effectively address the hierarchy of angels who rule the angel you may wish to contact. The use of the various pentagrams and the hexagram, the assumption of a Samo-Thracian elemental god-form, the invocation of the various names of the Hebrew deity and traditional angels, and the recitation of Bible verses are all tried-and-true magical methods to access the elemental world of Earth, but they are tools used in another kind of magical system—a system that views the magical universe from a slightly different angle, music played using a different scale of notes.

Please don't misunderstand me. Qabalistic temple openings such as the one above work effectively enough for Enochian elemental operations. But what makes them work, in my opinion, is not the pentagrams, Hebrew god names, or Bible verses. They work because, nestled within the ramblings and tossing about of salt and water, the magician is required to recognize and address by name the spiritual forces of the elements as they are uniquely organized and expressed in the Enochian magick system. In our example above, those names are Nanta (the great angel of Earth from the Tablet of Union), Mor, Dial, Hctga (the Three Great Secret Names of God from the Elemental Tablet of Earth), and Iczhiha (the king of the Elemental Tablet of Earth). The hierarchy of high elemental forces that the other magical system calls Adonai ha Aretz, Adonai Melehk, Malkuth, the Rose of Sharon, and the Lily of the Valley—everything the other system calls forth by means of pentagrams, gestures, and Bible verses—are all wrapped up and neatly addressed in the Enochian system in the names Nanta, Mor, Dial, Hctga, and Iczhiha.

If you conclude that my thoughts on this subject have some merit, I encourage you to customize for yourself a simply formatted little speech that addresses by name and in proper order the various angelic personages of the hierarchies of each Elemental Tablet. I will outline my address to the hierarchies at the end of this chapter. But first, let's discuss what the proper procedure for an elemental working might be.

DuQuette's Protocol for Enochian Elemental Vision Magick

The lower the angel you wish to contact is in the hierarchy of the Elemental Tablet, the more superior angels there are above it who must be named and addressed. Therefore, for our example I will use Adre, a lowly servient angel found under the arms of the Calvary cross of the Fire Subangle of the Elemental Tablet of Fire. (See chapter twenty-three, figures 71 through 79.)

I. Preliminaries

Before embarking on any formal magical operation it is helpful, indeed necessary, to feel good about oneself. Therefore, I always recommend that the magician first bathe, dress in clean clothing, and operate in a clean and uncluttered space. It is also wise to formally purify and banish the area before operating. These preliminary ceremonies can be as simple or as elaborate as you feel necessary. I always begin with a simple Lesser Banishing Ritual of the Pentagram that I've customized to reflect my own taste and spiritual proclivity. A classic version if the pentagram ritual can be found at the beginning of appendix I.

I next perform the Ceremony of Preparation that is outlined in chapter one and appendix I of this book. I consider this ritual an Enochian magick temple opening par excellence. I believe it serves to purify, banish, and consecrate both the temple and the magician in a manner that is in harmony with the universe as perceived by the Enochian angels. It also establishes and sanctifies the magical environment for the black mirror or scrying stone.

II. The Call(s)

A complete list of the angels of all four Elemental Tablets, together with their traditional duties, can be found in appendix IV.

In order to contact any angel from an Elemental Tablet, one need first activate the tablet by intoning the proper call or calls in the Enochian tongue. The calls and the key to their use can be found in appendix II.

Only one call is necessary if your target angel resides in the Great Central Cross (one of the Three Great Secret Names of God, a senior, or a king). Also, only one call is necessary if your target angel resides in the native subangle of the Elemental Tablet (e.g., the Fire Subangle of the Fire Tablet, the Water Subangle of the Water Tablet, etc.). But if your target angel resides in a non-native subangle (e.g., the Earth Subangle of the Water Tablet, the Air Subangle of the Fire Tablet, etc.), you must also recite an additional call assigned specifically to the subangle.

Our target angel, Adre, resides in the native subangle (Fire Subangle of the Fire Tablet), so we need only recite the sixth call (see appendix II).

Reciting the sixth call switches on the power of the Elemental Tablet of Fire, as it were, and puts it in standby mode to await more specific actions from the magician.

III. Addressing the Hierarchy

Whether you feel it or not,[112] your recitation of the sixth call has put you in an altered state of consciousness. Magically speaking, you are now present within the environment of the Element Tablet of Fire. You have awakened the spiritual forces of the tablet, and they are waiting to see if you are worthy of their attention. If you can convince the spirits of the tablet that you know where you are and how you got there, they will acknowledge you as a natural citizen of their well-ordered magical universe. Once you've established rapport with its superiors, the target angel will have no choice but to be compliant and ready to open its mysteries to you.

You prove your worthiness by remembering your manners and addressing by name the angels who reign over your target angel. In the case of a servient angel like Adre, the hierarchy is essentially the whole cast of characters. Starting from the top we have:

1. The Supreme Name of Fire from the Tablet of Union: Bitom.
2. The Three Great Secret Names of God of the Elemental Tablet of Fire: Oip, Teaa, Pdoce.
3. The name of the king of the Elemental Tablet of Fire: Edlprna.
4. The names of the six planetary seniors of the Elemental Tablet of Fire: Aaetpio, Adoeoet, Alndvod, Aapdoce, Arinna, and Anodoin.
5. The first god name of the Fire subangle: Rzionr.
6. The second god name of the Fire subangle: Nrzfm.
7. And finally, the name of our target servient angel: Adre.

If the target angel is higher on the hierarchical ladder, there are fewer names to include in your little speech. For example, to call a senior, you only need to use the names in steps 1, 2, and 3 before calling on the name of the target senior. If your target angel is the king of the Elemental Tablet, you only have to use the names in steps 1 and 2.[113]

And what about the kerubic angels who, as we learned earlier, have a separate hierarchy that skips the god names of the subangle?

In the case of the Fire subangle of the Elemental Tablet of Fire, simply replace the name in step 5 with the name of the god Kerub (Pziza) and replace the name in step 6 with the name of the Kerub (ZiZa, iZaZ, ZaZi, or aZiZ).

IV. Calling Your Target Angel

Repeat out loud the name of the target angel, Adre, several times. State why you have called it; ask your questions and/or make your requests, then sit quietly and scry. If necessary, repeat the call to induce a deeper state of mind. If you wish, have a tape recorder running and describe your vision as it unfolds. Don't tire yourself. Conclude your visionary business at the first signs of fatigue. Thank the angel and formally close the session with a banishing ritual of your choice.

V. Write It All Down

Immediately transcribe everything into your magical journal. I mean everything: the date and time, weather conditions, astrological aspects (if you know them and care about such things). Even if you think there is nothing to report, write that down, along with your thoughts of why things might not have worked.

Sample of a Hierarchical Invocation

The invocation below is what I currently use to acknowledge and invoke the hierarchy of the Elemental Tablet. I will provide the English translation of it first so you will know what it is saying. You may easily customize your own by referring to an Enochian dictionary.[114]

With the Elemental Tablet before me, I utter each angel's name and I wave my wand over the squares that spell it.

> I invoke and move thee, O thou, Spirit (name of target angel).
> And being exalted above you in the power of the Most High, I say unto you come forth and obey!
>
> In the name of (Supreme Name from the Tablet of Union; e.g., Exarp, Hcoma, Nanta, or Bitom);
>
> and in the name of (the Three Great Secret Names of God of the Elemental Tablet), > and in the name of (the name of the king of the Elemental Tablet), > and in the name of (the names of the six seniors of the Elemental Tablet),
>
>
> and in the name of …,
>
> and in the name of…,
>
> and in the name of … (as many names in hierarchy as necessary),
> I invoke and move thee, O thou Spirit (name of target angel).

Here is the same invocation in the Enochian angelic language:

> Ol vinu od zacam, Ils gah (name of target angel).
> Od lansh vors gi Iad, gohus pugo ils niiso od darbs!
>
> Dooiap (Supreme Name from the Tablet of Union),
>
> od dooiap (the Three Great Secret Names of God),
>
> od dooiap (the name of the king),
>
> od dooiap (the names of the six seniors),
>
> od dooiap …,
>
> od dooiap …,
> od dooiap … (as many names in hierarchy as necessary),

Ol vinu od zacam, Ils gah (name of target angel).

CHAPTER TWENTY-EIGHT

Aethyric Workings

Everything in heaven and earth is connected to everything in heaven and earth.

Everything in heaven and earth is the reflection of everything in heaven and earth.

Everything in heaven and earth contains the pattern of everything in heaven and earth.

Look hard enough at anything and you will eventually see everything.

—RABBI LAMED BEN CLIFFORD[115]

In order to more easily understand what follows, I ask that you turn back to chapter eighteen and refer to the columns in figure 63.

Right up until the last day of the Enochian period, Dee and Kelley believed that the thirty Aires (column I) were simply the numbered segments of creation that organized in groups of three[116] the ninety-one parts of the earth. Furthermore, they believed that the ninety-one divinely appointed names of the parts of the earth (column IV) were merely the angelic language names for the geographic areas of the earth named in column III. But in his final communication of July 13, 1584, the angel Ilemese revealed that the thirty Aires had names and a certain connection with the nineteenth call. As we saw in chapter twenty-five, this concept appeared to confuse and irritate Dee, who seemed comfortable with merely identifying the Aires by their sequence number.

Even though there is very little in the surviving material to suggest the thirty Aires are anything other than containers for the parts of the Earth, many modern magicians believe they carry a more profound significance. Indeed, it appears to me that this is an excellent example of modern magicians picking up the football where Dee and Kelley dropped it and running with it for a very big touchdown. The basic idea is this.

In keeping with the most fundamental hermetic and qabalistic axiom, “As above, so below,” the *micro*cosmic world (the physical universe and humanity) is the reflection of a heavenly *macro*cosmic world of divine consciousness. So too, the thirty Aires containing the ninety-one parts of the earth are the microcosmic reflection of thirty Aethyrs, or heavens, that surround and enclose the four Watchtowers of the Great Table in thirty heavenly spheres, like layers of a glass onion.

Like the ten sephiroth and the twenty-two paths on the Tree of Life, the thirty Aethyrs can be viewed as emanations of divine consciousness. The thirtieth or lowest Aethyr would represent a level of divine consciousness that is so low that it has almost descended into matter. The first or highest Aethyr would represent the pure and undifferentiated mind of Deity.

Using this model, the ninety-one parts of the earth (column IV of figure 63) have their counterparts in the Aethyrs, and the divine names of the parts of the earth (e.g., Pascomb for Syria) also serve as the names of angelic governors, who, in groups of three, inhabit the thirty Aethyrs. The only exception to this is the thirtieth Aethyr, Tex, which has four governors.

There is a great temptation among modern practitioners to project this thirty-Aethyr model upon classic schema of the qabalistic Tree of Life with its ten sephiroth and twenty-two paths that also represent levels of consciousness. Some magicians go so far as to suggest the thirty Aethyrs can simply be divided by three into ten units and superimposed upon the ten sephiroth of the Tree. I wish I could believe things were as simple as that, but, as I wrote in the previous chapter, the classic qabalistic and Enochian models oblige us to view the same universe from different angles.

Aleister Crowley gave perhaps the most comprehensible way of viewing the relationship of the thirty Aethyrs and the Tree of Life:

> It is to be remarked that the last three æthyrs have ten angels attributed to them, and they therefore represent the ten Sephiroth. Yet these ten form but one, a Malkuth-pendant to the next three, and so on, each set being, as it were, absorbed in the higher. The last set consists, therefore, of the first three æthyrs with the remaining twenty-seven as their Malkuth.[117]

The angels Crowley is referring to are the governors of the Aethyrs. Because Tex contains four governors instead of three, Crowley considered the last three Aethyrs (Tex, Rii, and Bag) as a set containing ten governors who could be projected on a Tree of Life (see figure 86).

He then posited that this entire Tree of Life becomes the Malkuth (the tenth and lowest sephirah) of a higher Tree of Life made up of the nine governors of the next three Aethyrs (Zaa, Des, and Vti), which, in turn, become the Malkuth of the next three Aethyrs, and so on all the way to the top.

You may or may not resonate with Crowley's view on this subject. Still, it is not unreasonable to compare the thirty Aethyrs to the sephiroth of the Tree of Life, especially when we understand both of them to be levels of personal initiation. This is precisely how Aleister Crowley viewed them. His systematic scrying of the Aethyrs as he walked across the North African Sahara in 1909 are chronicled in his visionary masterwork, The Vision & the Voice, a text I believe should be studied by anyone interested in Enochian aethyric vision work.

While I certainly am not yet ready to compare my aethyric adventures with those of Crowley's, I have on multiple occasions engaged in a systematic exploration of the Aethyrs. I have, on a number of occasions, scryed each Aethyr, starting with number thirty, Tex, and worked my way to number one, Lil. Even my Monday night magick class is obliged to now and again undergo thirty weeks of scrying the Aethyrs.

Am I suggesting that we all actually achieve the sublime levels of consciousness represented by the higher Aethyrs? Of course I am not. But most of us receive provocative and highly personal visions, especially in the lower Aethyrs. That is because the lower Aethyrs represent levels of consciousness that we visit all the time in the natural course of daily life—in dreams, reveries, ecstasies, even deliriums. Even as I write these words, I am probably dipping into the lower Aethyrs as my memory and imagination conjure images that help me crystallize ideas I can put into words on the page. (I probably spent my entire senior year of high school staring into space and cruising in the lower Aethyrs!)

As the magician moves upwards through the Aethyrs, he or she progressively breaks into higher and higher levels of consciousness. If we are prepared for this new territory, our visions are characterized by a certain spontaneity and lucidity. However, when we begin to get out of our depth—when we haven't yet achieved the level of consciousness necessary to take the next step—our visions become murky and forced, as if we were watching it through a glass darkly. When this happens, the vision is usually characterized by a clear message announcing in no uncertain terms that we have not completely penetrated the Aethyr.

But that is not a bad thing. In fact, it is exactly what we want to happen, because we then know where we are on the initiatory ladder. Moreover, we have a chance of knowing what it is we need to do (or, more accurately, we will know who we need to become) to take the next step in our initiatory career. Allow me to illustrate with a hypothetical example.

Let's say you've resolved to systematically scry all thirty Aethyrs, one per night, from thirty to one, over a one-month period. Each night after your scrying session, you dutifully record in your journal the details of your vision. Everything is going along nicely until you attempt to penetrate in vision the fifteenth Aethyr, Oxo. You recite the nineteenth call in the proper manner and call for the three governors of Oxo (Tahando, Nociabi, and Tastoxo; see figure 63 column IV).

As the vision begins, three angels appear in the mirror, crystal, or your mind's eye, and march in a circle around you so that you cannot move in any direction. They will not respond to your questions or vouchsafe a proper vision. When something like this happens, you know that your present level of consciousness (your personal initiatory grade) is not refined enough to penetrate, let alone appreciate, the next Aethyr. It's as though you are a radio receiver not yet equipped to pull in higher broadcast frequencies. In order for you to do so, you will need to upgrade your equipment by raising your level of consciousness.

You will need to undergo an initiatory experience that will turn you into a more refined visionary traveler. And, as in all initiations, there is an obstacle that needs to be overcome. This obstacle can be anything from a psychological issue to a personal demon or character flaw. In order to conquer it, you might need just a tiny illumination concerning life, or a magical shift of focus, or to successfully achieve a more profound meditative state or trance.

You won't need to look far to discover what this obstacle is. It should be right there in your magical diary, in the record of the last Aethyr you could successfully penetrate.

Somewhere in that vision there is a message telling you what it is you must do in order to take the next step in your spiritual journey through the heavens. It is sublimely simple and personal. It makes Enochian aethyric magick, in my opinion, a far more effective and user-friendly method of magical self-transformation than guided meditations or qabalistic pathworkings.

The method I use is straightforward. After performing a banishing and the Ceremony of Preparation, I simply recite the nineteenth call using the name of the particular Aethyr I wish to visit. Then I repeat the names of the three governors of the Aethyr until the vision begins.

The vision is usually characterized by the appearance of one or more of the governors, who stand ready to answer my inquiries and demonstrate the nature of the Aethyr. As in elemental workings, I try not to tire myself, and afterward make a detailed record of my experiences in my diary.

A complete list of the governors is found in chapter eighteen, in column IV of the table designated figure 63, and in appendix II, figure 90.

Epilogue

In the Middle of the Night

> Isn't it enough to see that a garden is beautiful without having to believe that there are fairies at the bottom of it too?
> —Douglas Adams

It's 3:15 a.m. For the last few days, I have arranged to sleep through the afternoon heat of an unseasonably hot late summer so that I may write undisturbed in the cool peace and quiet of the wee hours. This book of magick has taken me much longer to complete than I anticipated. Did I say “complete”? It's a well-worn cliché that a writer never finishes a work, but merely abandons it. I've finally come to the place where I'm ready to abandon this book. For as slim as it is, it might be hard for you to believe that it has dominated my life for nearly three years. My publisher expected it in their hands over a year ago, and for their patience I am profoundly grateful.

This is far from the end of the material, however. I've worked hard and long on the appendices, which for the practicing Enochian magician will likely become the most worn and dog-eared section of the book.

I must confess that my attitudes concerning Enochian magick have changed many times in the thirty years it has been part of my life. My respect for the magical art form, however, has never diminished and has continued to grow unabated. I feel like the musician who is moved to tears by listening to a great symphony, but who can play only a few tunes himself and those only moderately well.

Perhaps you will never choose to make Enochian magick a part of your spiritual repertoire. Perhaps you will. In either case, as I abandon this book, it is my sincerest hope that I have been able to help you in some small measure attune your magical ear to the music of the spheres.

Adieu.

Appendix I

The Ceremony of Preparation

The magician purifies and banishes the temple as he or she has skill to do so. Below is a standard version of the Lesser Banishing Ritual, a ceremony used by many modern magicians.

Touching the forehead, say, Ateh ("Unto Thee").

Touching the breast, say, Malkuth ("the Kingdom").

Touching the right shoulder, say, ve-Geburah ("and the Power").

Touching the left shoulder, say, ve-Gedulah ("and the Glory").

Clasping the hand upon the breast, say, le-OLAHM, AMEN ("to the Ages, Amen").

Turning to the east, make the banishing pentagram (that of Earth) with the wand. Say, IHVH ("Ye-ho-wau").

Turning to the south, again draw the pentagram but say, ADNI ("Adonai").

Turning to the west, again draw the pentagram but say AHIH ("Eheieh").

Turning to the north, again draw the pentagram, but say AGLA ("Agla").

Extend the arms in the form of a cross say:

Before me Raphael, Behind me Gabriel,
On my right hand, Michael,
On my left hand, Auriel,
For about me flames the pentagram
And in the column stands the six-rayed star.

Touching the forehead, say, Ateh (“Unto Thee”).

Touching the breast, say, Malkuth (“the Kingdom”).

Touching the right shoulder, say, ve-Geburah (“and the Power”).

Touching the left shoulder, say, ve-Gedulah (“and the Glory”).

Clasping the hand upon the breast, say, le-OLAHM, AMEN (“to the Ages, Amen”).

The Ceremony of Preparation

The Temple

The Holy Table is set in the middle of the room upon a carpet of red silk. Four small versions of the Sigillum Dei Aemeth rest under the table legs. In the center of the Holy Table rests the Sigillum Dei Aemeth surrounded by the seven Ensigns of Creation. All are covered and draped by a red silk cloth with gold tassels at the corners. The black mirror or scrying crystal is placed upon the covered Sigillum. The Ring and Lamen are at hand upon the covered table.

A chair is positioned before the table so that the face of the scryer may be reflected in the mirror. The chair must also rest upon the red silk carpet. When operating at night or in a dimly lit room, one or two candles can also be place upon the covered Holy Table.

The Ceremony

After banishing, the magician sits down and prays:

> Teach me (O creator of all things) to have correct knowledgeand understanding, for your wisdom is all that I desire. Speakyour word in my ear (O creator of all things) and set your wisdom in my heart. Amen.

The magician picks up the Ring and prays:

> Behold the Ring. Lo, this it is. This is it, wherewith all miracles, and divine works and wonders were wrought by Solomon: this is it, which the Archangel Michael has revealed to me. This is it, which Philosophy dreameth of. This is it, which the Angels scarce know. This is it, and blessed be his name: yea, his Name be blessed forever. Without this I shall do nothing. Blessed be his name, that encompasses all things: Wonders are in him, and his name is WONDERFUL: PELE. His Name works wonders from generation to generation. Amen.

The magician picks up the Lamen and prays:

> Behold the Lamen. As the Holy Table conciliates Heaven and Earth, let this Lamen which I place over my heart conciliate me to the Holy Table. Amen.

The magician recites seven complete rounds of the chant of the Holy Table's Perimeter Letters. If possible, the magician traces with the wand the covered letters he or she is chanting:

> Pa Med Fam Med Drux Fam Fam Ur Ged Graph Drux Med
> Graph Graph Med Med Or Med Gal Ged Ged Drux.

> Pa Drux Un Tal Fam Don Ur Graph Don Or Gisg Gon Med > Un Ged Med Graph Van Ur Don Don Un.
> Pa Drux Ur Ur Don Ur Drux Un Med Graph Graph Med Med > Graph Ceph Ged Ged Ur Mals Mals Fam Un.
> Pa Gon Med Un Graph Fam Mals Tal Ur Pa Pa Drux Un Un
> Van Un Med Un Gon Drux Drux Ur.

The magician chants seven rounds of the twelve letters of the Holy Table's central square:

> Med Gon Gisg, Don Ur Van, Ur Don Ur, Med Med Graph.
> Med Don Ur Med, Gon Ur Don Med, Gisg Van Ur Graph.

The magician chants one round of the names of the forty-nine angels upon the Sigillum Dei Aemeth:

> Galas Gethog Thaoth Horlωn Innon Aaoth Galethog
> Zaphkiel Zedekiel Cumael Raphael Haniel Michael Gabriel
>
> E(l) Me Ese Iana Akele Azdobon Stimcul
>
> I Ih Ilr Dmal Heeoa Beigia Stimcul
>
> S Ab Ath Izad Ekiei Madimi Esemeli
>
> E An Ave Liba Rocle Hagonel Ilemes
> Sabathiel Zadkiel Madimiel Semeliel Nogahel Corabiel Lavanael

Finally, the magician quietly whispers the Holy Names of the Round Table of Nalvage. First the angel names of the corners:

> luah lang sach urch

Then the god names of the four continents:

> Iad moz zir—iad bab zna—iad sor gru—iad ser osf.

The magician then proceeds to the business at hand—calling an angel of an Elemental Tablet or scrying an Aethyr.

When the magician's work is done, he or she dismisses the spirit with thanks and prays:

> Thy Name be mighty, O God, which canst open the veil whereby Thy All-Powerful Will may be opened unto men. Power, Glory, and Honor be unto Thee, For Thou art the same God of all things, and art life eternal. Amen.

Appendix II

The Enochian Calls (Keys)

The genuineness of these Keys, altogether apart from any critical observation, is guaranteed by the fact that anyone with the smallest capacity for Magick finds that they work.

—ALEISTER CROWLEY[118]

Invocations?

Enochian magick as developed by the Golden Dawn and widely practiced today uses the first eighteen calls to activate the Elemental Tablets and contact the resident angels. However, in the hectic last days of the Enochian period, Dee was instructed in several places to write his own invocations. It remains unclear to me whether or not the angels were suggesting that additional “homemade” invocations were to be created as appendages to the calls. What is clear to me, after more than a quarter century of practical application, is the fact that the calls by themselves (with only the briefest of additional verbiage to awaken target angels and their hierarchy) serve admirably as the only invocations a magician needs.

Naturally, if it appeals to your magical sense of art to compose additional invocations to utter before and/or after the call, I encourage you to do so.

Pronunciation

You will probably be very surprised at how little time I spend on this subject. In fact, I am very tempted to simply paraphrase Rabbi Ben Clifford's heretical comment about the Hebrew language and tell you bluntly, “There is no such thing as correct Enochian pronunciation!” On a few occasions, the communicating angels gave Dee and Kelley suggestions as to how certain words are pronounced. But, by and large, we modern magicians are left to our own devices as to how to push these awkwardly constructed words out of our mouths.

Dee notated the words of the calls in columns. The left column contained the Enochian word in all uppercase letters—PIRIPSOL, for example. The right column contained the word in upper-and lowercase letters, which split the word into syllables and characterized certain letters as if to suggest pronunciation: Pe ríp sol. Sometimes the translation of the word appeared in a center column: “of the heavens.”

The Golden Dawn and Crowley use a pronunciation method that they felt rolled more fluidly off the tongue. This method obliged the magician to insert a natural Hebrew vowel sound after every Enochian consonant. For example, the word butmon (meaning “mouth”) would be pronounced, “but-a-mon-u.” This is wonderful for words such as this one, giving it an almost Italian lilt. But things get a little crazy when in comes to the letter z, which the English currently pronounce as “zed” and in Dee and Kelley's day was pronounced “zod.”

The angels did on occasion instruct Dee when and when not to use “zod,” but its universal application to a language that uses the letter z very often becomes, in my opinion, laughably cumbersome. Using the Golden Dawn pronunciation method, the simple, one-syllable Enochain word zims (“clothing”) becomes the unwieldy, four-syllable “zod-I-me-zod.” You tell me which rolls off the tongue better.

The most obvious alternative to the GD pronunciation is simply sounding out the words as they are written (which appears to be what the angels generally wanted Dee and Kelley to do). For the last fifteen years, this is what I have done, and it is what I recommend to students who are learning Enochian magick. Before that, however, I used the GD/Crowley pronunciation method and was perfectly happy with it. In fact, I still use the Italian sounding method when I recite the first and second calls because I have them memorized and they hold a special place in my heart.

Both methods work just fine. In fact, any sincere effort on the part of the magician to sound out the words as they appear in the call works. Some of the best group scrying sessions I have experienced have followed the most horribly butchered recitations of the calls. It's as though the Enochian angels (like the French) appreciate any attempt on your part to speak their language. I often use the example of a mouse. If a mouse hopped up on your shoe and squeaked, you'd just shoo it away. But if it hopped up on your shoe and started to talk to you in your native tongue, you'd be impressed. You wouldn't even care if it spoke with a thick accent!

I have tried to present the calls below as close as possible to the original spelling, breaks, letter characterization, and punctuation. The English translation that follows each call is generally punctuated in the same way as the Enochian.

The Calls, the Tablet of Union, and the Elemental Tablets

According to the Golden Dawn, Crowley, and many modern Enochian magick practitioners, the first eighteen calls activate the Tablet of Union, the Elemental Tablets, and the hierarchy of angels resident in the tablets in a very specific (and demonstrably logical) manner. Although the Dee and Kelley source material does not support this arrangement, it has become the foundation of a remarkably workable system. This table is the key to their use.

CALL	ELEMENTAL TABLET	CALL USED FOR . . .
1	TABLET OF UNION	The first call is to be used first in all invocations of angels of the Tablet of Union. According to the Golden Dawn, it is never used for actions dealing with angels of the Elemental Tablets.
2	TABLET OF UNION	The second call is to be used second (after call 1) to invoke Angel EHNB of Tablet of Union. According to the Golden Dawn, it is never used with Elemental Tablets.
3	AIR	The third call can be used in one of three ways: 1. Used third (after calls 1 and 2) to invoke angels of EXARP of the Tablet of Union. 2. Used first for operations involving the Elemental Tablet of Air. 3. Used by itself for invocations of the Seniors from the Elemental Tablet of Air or for angels from the Air Subangle of the Elemental Tablet of Air.
4	WATER	The fourth call can be used in one of three ways: 1. Used third (after calls 1 and 2) to invoke angels of HCOMA of Tablet of Union. 2. Used first for operations involving the Elemental Tablet of Water. 3. Used by itself for invocations of the Seniors from the Elemental Tablet of Water or for angels from the Water subangle of the Elemental Tablet of Water.
5	EARTH	The fifth call can be used in one of three ways: 1. Used third (after calls 1 and 2) to invoke angels of NANTA of Tablet of Union, 2. Used first for operations involving the Elemental Tablet of Earth. 3. Used by itself for invocations of the Seniors from the Elemental Tablet of Earth or for angels from the Earth subangle of the Elemental Tablet of Earth.

I reign over you, sayeth the God of Justice, in power exalted above the firmaments of wrath: in whose hands the Sun is as a sword and the Moon as a through-thrusting fire which measureth your garments in the midst of my vestures, and trussed you together as the palms of my hands: Whose seats I garnished with the fire of gathering and (which) beautified your garments with admiration: to whom I made a law to govern the holy ones and delivered you a rod with the ark of knowledge. Moreover you lifted up your voices and swear obedience and faith to him that liveth and triumpheth whose beginning is not, nor end can not be, which shineth as a flame in the midst of your palace and reignneth amongst you as the balance of righteousness and truth. The Call of the Thirty Aethyrs

The nineteenth call is used to open each of the thirty Aethyrs. Only the name of the Aethyr itself (the third word in the first sentence) is changed.

Each Aethyr (with the exception of the thirtieth) is inhabited by three governors, who could be considered personifications of the nature of the Aethyr. I believe that after you recite the call and before you settle down to scry, it is important to pronounce, vibrate, or otherwise incorporate the names of the governors in a brief invocation.

The names of the Aethyrs and their governors are listed in figure 90. If you wish to incorporate the sigils of the governors (the symmetrical characters) for visualizations or to create talismans, the sigils can be found in chapter eighteen, in column VI of figure 63.

O you heavens which dwell in the First Ayre are mighty in the parts of the Earth, and execute the Judgment of the Highest, to you it is said, Behold the face of your God, the beginning of comfort, whose eyes are the brightness of the heavens, which provided you for the government of the Earth and her unspeakable variety, furnishing you with a power of understanding to dispose all things according to the providence of Him that sitteth on the Holy Throne, and rose up in the beginning saying: the Earth let her be governed by her parts and let there be division in her, that the glory of her may be always drunken and vexed in it self. Her course, let it run with the heavens, and as a handmaid let her serve them. One season let it confound an other, and let there be no creature upon or within her the same, All her members let them differ in their qualities, and let there be no one creature equal with an other: the reasonable Creatures of the Earth let them vex and weed out one an other, and the dwelling places let them forget their names: the work of man, and his pomp, let them be defaced: his buildings let them become caves for the beasts of the field. Confound her understanding with darkness. For why? It repenteth me I made Man. One while let her be known and an other while a stranger: because she is the bed of a Harlot, and the dwelling place of Him that is Fallen. O you heavens arise: the lower heavens underneath you, let them serve you! Govern those that govern: cast down such as fall! Bring forth with those that increase, and destroy the rotten! No place let it remain in one number: add and diminish until the stars be numbered! Arise, Move, and Appear before the Covenant of his mouth, which he hath sworn unto us in his Justice. Open the Mysteries of your Creation: and make us partakers of Undefiled Knowledge.

Appendix III

The Geographical Location of the Ninety-one Parts of the Earth Named by Man, as Detailed in JohnDee's Liber Scientiae Auxilii Et Victoriae Terrestris[119]

by Robin E. Cousins

Liber Scientiae Auxilii et Victoriae Terrestris, which forms part of Sloane Manuscript 3191, provides the details necessary to operate a system of magic, by which the magician can discover

> 'how to compare … [the] divisions of provinces according to the Divisions of the Stars, with the Ministry of the Ruling Intelligences, and Blessings of the Tribes of Israel, the Lots of the Apostles, and Typical Seals of the Sacred Scripture, [so that he] shall be able to obtain great and prophetical oracles, concerning every region, of things to come.'[120]

On Wednesday 23 May 1584, while in Krakow, John Dee and Edward Kelley received from the Spirit Nalvage the names of ninety-one regions and provinces of the physical world, as defined by man. At this time America was no longer considered to be a group of islands; but Australia had yet to be discovered and the search for the North-West Passage had just commenced. The names of the ninety-one parts relate to the Ptolemaic ancient world of about AD 150 with some additions. The Spirit Nalvage explains:

> 'Notwithstanding the Angel of the Lord appeared unto Ptolemie, and opened unto him the parts of the Earth: but some he was commanded to secret: and those are Northward under your Pole. But unto yon, the very true names of the World in her Creation are delivered.'[121]

The list is not altogether satisfactory. Dee, who was well-versed in geography, had not heard of some of the places and even Nalvage said, 'Here are 15, which were never known in these times … The rest are'. Many of the strange locations are indeed in the Polar Regions, which were uncharted at the time. In fact, a considerable Arctic land mass was believed to exist and was featured on sixteenth century maps. Nevertheless, locations for this region are desirable and there are many areas in the extreme north, whether land or sea, which can be covered by the descriptions. The belief of a south polar continent (Tolpam, Part 58) was not inaccurate, a location which can usefully extend to Australasia which was undiscovered at the time.

Two points emerge at the end of the communication relating to known lands not included in the list. Firstly, when Dee asks of ‘Polonia, Moschovia, Dania, Hibernia (Ireland), Islandia, and so of many others’, Nalvage replies: ‘Polonia and Moscovia, are of Sarmatia (Russia); Denmark, Ireland, Frizeland, Iseland, are of Britain: And so it is of the rest.’[122] Does this imply that Brytania (Part 61) can be used to gain access to lands not included within the ninety-one parts? Secondly, when Dee presses Nalvage as to which part governs ‘Atlantis and the annexed places, under the King of Spain called the West Indies’, Nalvage replies: ‘When these 30 appear, they can each tell you what they own. Prepare for tomorrows Action’. The communication is, therefore, incomplete. Unfortunately, ‘tomorrows Action’ never occurred, because Kelley believed Nalvage to have taken the descriptions from books, including Agrippa's Occult Philosophy, and refused to communicate further. ‘E. K. remained of his wilful intent’, noted a frustrated Dee. However, Onigap (Part 34) may refer to these lands and there is the possibly implied use of Brytania, as described above. Note that Dee held that the term ‘West Indies’ was very misleading and preferred to use ‘Atlantis’ instead of ‘America’, as a name for the new lands. Nevertheless, the additional thirty parts wait to be realised, which would bring the total of the parts of the Earth to 121. It is interesting to speculate, whether they would affect the design of the Great Table.

Dee bought Gerhard Mercator's Universal Chart of the World and the geographical work of Pomponius Mela to help him with his locations. He does not record his success. Ultimately, the advice of Nalvage in relation to Chaldei (Part 42) and Chaldea (Part 72) is the only way to establish the locations of the obscure and ambiguously described parts of the world: ‘You shall finde the difference of it, in practice’.

The Ninety-One Parts of the World

Many of the locations are well-known. However, for the obscurer areas Dee's Spiritual Diaries (Cotton Appendix XLVI, Parts 1 & 2, published as A True and Faithful Relation of What passed for many Yeers Between Dr. John Dee and Some Spirits, edited by Meric Casaubon, 1659) are often the only guide. In these instances, supportive quotations are given. Other parts, especially those located by Kelley or Nalvage in the Far Orient or in the Arctic regions, are difficult to place on the world map today, as in Dee's time these regions were largely unexplored and uncharted.

1 AEGYPTUS: Egypt.

2 SYRIA: Southern Syria.

3 MESOPOTAMIA: Land between the Tigris and Euphrates rivers in Northern Iraq and North-East Syria.

4 CAPPADOCIA: Extensive province of Central Turkey, stretching from the Black Sea in the north to Cilicia (Part 14) in the south. The original territory, Cappadocia Proper, occupied the southern areas.

5 TUSCIA: Tuscany or Etruria, a province in Central Italy including Florence.

6 PARVA ASIA: Asia Minor, Anatolia or Asiatic Turkey.

7 HYRCANIA: Area south-east of the Caspian Sea in Iran.

8 THRACIA: Thrace includes Eastern Greece, Turkey in Europe, and Southern Bulgaria.

9 GOSMAM: According to Kelley, ‘Here appear great Hills, and veins of the Gold Mines appear: the men seem to have baskets of leather. This is one of the places under the Pole Artick.’

10 THEBAIDI: Thebes (Egypt) and surrounding area.

11 PARSADAL: Kelly, ‘Here the sun shineth fair.’ Most probably Pasargardae or Parsagarda (‘the habitation of the Persians’), the ancient capital of Parsa/Persis/Persia Proper or the modern Iranian province of Fars (Part 74). Parsagarda is located about 60 miles northeast of Shiraz.

12 INDIA: Includes Indian provinces along the Indus River, roughly present-day Pakistan and India West of the Ganges (India Intra Ganges).

13 BACTRIANE: Bactriana covers Northern Afghanistan and the southeast of the Turkmenistan, the River Amu Darya (Oxus) forming the northern boundary. For lands to the north of the river, see Sogdiana (Part 26).

14 CILICIA: Coastal country bordering the Mediterranean in South-East Turkey.

15 OXIANA: Alexandreia Oxiana, a town and its surrounding area on the Oxus River (Amu Darya) on the borders of Northern Afghanistan and Uzbekistan.

16 NUMIDIA: Eastern Algerian coastal district between Africa (Part 86) and Mauretania (Part 91).

17 CYPRUS: Cyprus.

18 PARTHIA: North-East Iran, to the south of Hyrcania (Part 7). The region has a common border with Turkmenistan.

19 GETULIA: The Western Sahara, south of Morocco, including Southern Algeria, Mali and the modern state of Mauritania.

20 ARABIA: Saudi Arabia.

21 PHALAGON: Dee: ‘I have never heard of it.’

Kelley: ‘It is toward the North, where the veines of Gold … appear … The men have things on their shoulders of beasts skins.’

Dee: ‘Groynland as I think’ (i.e. Greenland).

22 MANTIANA: This is Matiana or the Mattieni by Lacus Matianus, now Lake Urmia in North-Western Iran. The population is mainly Kurdish. Lake Van, approximately 200 miles west in Eastern Turkey, was once called Lake Mantiana.

23 SOXIA: Sacae/Sachia/Sakas approximates with Xinjiang Uygar or Sinkiang Uighur region, North-West China. It is also known as Chinese Turkistan.

Kelley: ‘People here appear of reddish colour.’

24 GALLIA: A ‘greater’ France with the Rhine forming the northern and eastern boundaries, thereby including Belgium, Luxembourg, and the Southern Netherlands.

25 ILLYRIA: At its greatest extent, Illyria included Central and Eastern Austria, Western Hungary or Transdanubia, the former Yugoslavia excluding Macedonia, Northern Bulgaria and Romania.

26 SOGDIANA: District between the rivers Amu Darya (Oxus) and Syr Darya (Jaxartes) including Uzbekistan, with the cities of Bokhara and Samarkand, and Western Tajikistan. Afghanistan is to the south, for which see Bactriana (Part 13).

27 LYDIA: Coastal region in Western Turkey.

28 CASPIS: Area to the south-west of the Caspian Sea in Iran.

29 GERMANIA: Includes modern Germany, Poland, the Czech Republic, Slovakia, and extends to the Italian border in the south, incorporating Switzerland and the Tyrol in Western Austria. In the north, Germania can include Denmark, Norway and Sweden, although Dee was told that Brytania (Part 61) could be used for Denmark, which at that time governed Norway as well.

30 TRENAM: Kelley: ‘Here appear Monkies, great flocks. The people have leather Coats, and no beards, thick leather, and Garthers … ‘

Nalvage: ‘These people are not known to you?’

Dee: ‘Are they not in Africa?’

Nalvage: ‘They be.’

Probably Teniam, a region on Jodocus Hondius's World Map (1608) straddling the Ivory Coast/Upper Volta/Ghana borderlands.

31 BITHYNIA: Black Sea coastal region in the north of Turkey, west of Paphlagonia (Part 40), including Istanbul (Asian side).

32 GRAECIA: Nalvage: ‘A great Citie, and the Sea hard by it.’

Dee: ‘Is not that great Citie Constantinople?’

Nalvage: ‘It is …’

Graecia is thus Istanbul, not Greece; for which use Achaia (Part 37).

33 LICIA: Lycia is a country on the south coast of Turkey or Anatolia.

34 ONIGAP: Kelley: ‘Here appear handsome men, in gathered tucked garments, and their shoes come up to the middle of their legs, of diverse coloured leather.’

Nalvage: ‘These be beyond Hispaniola.’

Kelley: ‘It is a low Countrey. Here appear great piles of Stones like St Andrews Crosses … There are on this side of it (a great way) a great number of dead Carkases …’

Nalvage: ‘It is beyond Giapan.’ (That is, beyond Japan across the Pacific to the Americas. Note that Onigap is an anagram of Giapon.)

Dee: ‘Then it is that land, which I use to call Atlantis.’

Nalvage: ‘They stretch more near the west.’

This can only be Mexico, particularly the Yucatan. Beyond Hispaniola(Haiti and Domenica) and west of ‘Atlantis’ or America is Central Mexico and the Yucatan, which is a low-lying peninsula. The people wore bright colours; the temples could resemble St Andrew's crosses; and, many people were slaughtered by the Spanish Conquistadores.

35 INDIA MAJOR: India Extra Gangem or India east of the Ganges, which includes all of South-East Asia.

36 ORCHENY: Nalvage: ‘A great many little Isles.’

Dee: ‘Do you mean the Isles of Orkney?’

Nalvage: ‘No.’

Dee: ‘They seem to be the Isles of Malacha.’

Dee is mistakenly thinking of the islands around Malaya (Malacha or Malacca) or even the Moluccas. The Orcheni were a people south of Chaldea (Part 72), living on or by islands in the marshlands of the lower Tigris and Euphrates.

37 ACHAIA: Southern Greece, including Athens and the Peloponnisos.

38 ARMENIA: Extensive region which, most comprehensively, stretches from the Euphrates in eastern Turkey to the Caspian Sea, thereby including Armenia and Azerbaijan.

39 CILICIA (NEMROD): Nalvage: ‘You never knew this Cilicia. This is Cilicia where the Children of Nemrod dwell. It is up in the Mountains beyond Cathay.’ Probably Calatia, a region in this location featured on Emery Molyneux's terrestrial globe of 1592. It equates with the extreme north-eastern province of Russia by the Bering Straits, the Magandan Oblast. Cilicia in Turkey is Part 14.

40 PAPHLAGONIA: Black Sea coastal country in the north of Turkey.

41 PHASIANA: Mainly Kurdish region in Eastern Turkey, north of Lake Van, not to be confused with Phazania/Fezzan in Libya, for which see Garamantica (Part 45).

42 CHALDEI: The people of Chaldea (Part 72).

43 ITERGI: Nalvage: ‘… the people are yellow, tawney … They are to the south of the last Cilicians.’ This is possibly Mongolia, Manchuria (North-East China), and Korea. The name appears in this region on a terrestrial globe, dated 1492, of German geographer Martin Behaim (c.1459–1507).

44 MACEDONIA: Northern Greece and the Former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia.

45 GARAMANTICA: Garamantes, a large area in Inner Africa, covering the Eastern Sahara, including the south of Libya (Fezzan), extreme South-Eastern Algeria, Niger and Chad.

46 SAUROMATICA: Sarmatia or European Russia.

47 AETHIOPIA: Includes Ethiopia south of Egypt and also the entire unknown African continent south of the Equator, which was known as Ethiopia Interior in Dee's time. Unexplored parts of Africa north of the Equator were known as Libya Interior.

48 FIACIM: Kelley: ‘Now he sheweth by the North Pole and the great Mountain.’

This is the North Pole. A great mountain was believed to exist at the Pole.

49 COLCHICA: Colchis roughly equates with the modern Republic of Georgia, located to the east of the Black Sea.

50 CIRENIACA: Cyrenaica, a Mediterranean coastal region of Eastern Libya.

51 NASAMONIA: Ill-defined north-eastern Libyan coastal district by the Gulf of Sirte in the west of Cireniaca (Part 50).

52 CARTHAGO: Carthage, Tunisia.

53 COXLANT: Nalvage: ‘It appeareth very Eastward.’

Kelley: ‘It is on high ground. There come four Rivers out of it, one East, another West, another North, and another South … Is this the Paradise that Adam was banished out of?’

Nalvage: ‘The very same.’

A discussion follows which does not help to locate Coxlant. The search for the Earthly Paradise, like the Eldorado, was the dream of early explorers. The four rivers are the Pison (The Persian Gulf?), Gihon (The Nile?), Hiddekel (Tigris), and Euphrates. The favourite location of Paradise was considered to be a little north of the confluence of the Tigris and Euphrates. However, other locations favoured sites further north in Mesopotamia and Armenia. Tibet could be another location. It is very easterly; on high ground; and the four rivers are the Mekong (east), the Indus (west), the Yangtze (north), and the Brahmaputra (south). Ultimately, however, the location of Coxlant or the Earthly Paradise must rest with the spirituality of the individual.

54 IDUMEA: Also called Edom, this is Southern Israel and Jordan.

55 PARSTAVIA: Actually Bastarnia, approximately Bessarabia or Moldavia to the east of Romania.

56 CELTICA: Nalvage: ‘It is that which you call Flandria, the Low Country.’

This is North-West France and Belgium, not Central Gaul which is usually known as Celtica.

57 VINSAN: Kelley: ‘Here appear men with tallons like Lions. They be very devils. There are five isles of them.’

Suggest the ancient kingdom of Wu-Sun, south of Lake Balkhash in Kazakhstan. The ‘isles’ could be communities near the lake.

58 TOLPAM: Kelley: ‘Under the South Pole.’ This is Antarctica and Australasia.

59 CARCEDONIA: Carchedonia or modern Tunisia.

60 ITALIA: Italy, including the Istrian Peninsula in Croatia.

61 BRYTANIA: The British Isles, Scandinavia, and possibly places not included in the 91 parts.

62 PHENICES: Phoenicia, approximately the Lebanon and Northern Israel.

63 COMAGINEN: Commagene, a land-locked district in Southern Turkey, bounded on the east by the Euphrates and on the south by Syria. Cilicia (Part 14) is to the west.

64 APULIA: Province in south-east Italy between the Apennines and the Adriatic, bounded on the south by Calabria or the ‘heel’ of Italy.

65 MARMARICA: North African coastal region straddling the Egyptian and Libyan border. The Nile forms the eastern boundary.

66 CONCAVA SYRIA: Hollow Syria, usually known as Coele Syria, now forms Northern Syria.

67 GEBAL: Later Byblos, now Jubayl, about twenty miles north of Beirut, Lebanon.

68 ELAM: Also known as Susiana, it is approximately the same as the modern Iranian province of Khuzestan at the north of the Persian Gulf, bordering Iraq and including Abadan.

69 IDUNI: Nalvage: ‘It is beyond Greenland.’

70 MEDIA: North-Western Iran, south of Caspis (Part 28) and Hyrcania (Part 7). Includes Teheran.

71 ARIANA: Eastern Iran, Pakistan west of the Indus, Southern Afghanistan.

72 CHALDEA: A tract of country in South Iraq running along the Euphrates from the Persian Gulf to Babylon (about 50 miles south of Bagdad). The Shamiya Desert forms the western boundary.

73 SERICIPOPULI: A people in Eastern Asia. Serica or Seres equates with China and the Far East.

74 PERSIA: Persis or Parsa, this is approximately the modern Iranian province of Fars. Located in South-West Iran and bounded on the west by the Persian Gulf, the province was the kernel of ancient Persia and includes the ancient cities of Parsagarda (Part 11) and Persepolis.

75 GONGATHA: Kelley: ‘Towards the South Pole.’

This is Gongala, an area to the south of Libya Interior by the Equator. In the sixteenth century Kelley's description is apt, but today the region equates with South Sudan.

76 GORSIM: Kelley: ‘Beares and Lions here.’

Most probably Chorazin/Korazim/Gorazim, an ancient site to the north of Lake Tiberias (Sea of Galilee), Israel, with the ruins of a black basalt synagogue. The place was condemned by Jesus and legend claims the Antichrist will be born there. Note also Chorasmia/Khorezm/Khiva, south-east of the Caspian Sea in Turkmenistan.

77 HISPANIA: Spain and Portugal.

78 PAMPHILIA: Southern Turkish coastal land, between Lycia (Part 33) and Cilicia (Part 14), forming a narrow strip of land around the Bay of Antalya.

79 OACIDI: This is Oasitae (‘… of the Oasis’), the oasis area west of the Nile, which includes the great oasis of the Oracle of Amon.

80 BABYLON or BABYLONIA: Region in Southern Iraq, extending north from the Persian Gulf between the Lower Tigris and the northeastern Arabian desert. Babylon, the capital, is about fifty miles south of Bagdad.

81 MEDIAN: Kelley: ‘It is much Northward.’

Note, however, Midian—the land of the Midianites by Sinai; or, even the people of Media (Part 70).

82 IDUMIAN: Kelley: ‘They are two Isles environed with an arm of the Scythian Sea, which goeth in at Maspi.’

Most probably the region to the north-east of the Aral Sea in the Kazakhstan. Suggest ‘Maspi’ is a corruption of the Aspisii Montes/Mons Aspisii, which shortened to M. Aspisii, distorts to Maspi. The mountains were supposedly located in this region, but in the sixteenth century much of this land and especially the far north of Siberia or Scythia was Terrae Incognita. Mercator's map of North-East Asia, which is dated 1569, shows a hypothetical arm of the Scythian Sea (Laptev and East Siberian seas) almost reaching to the north-east of the Aral Sea with the M. Aspisii nearby. The Aspisii Scythea were the people dwelling to the west of the mountains and to the north of the River Jaxartes (Syr Darya). Note also, however, the Arimaspi detailed in Part 88 below. The Maspii, a noble Persian tribe, are too far south to be considered.

83 FELIX ARABIA: Arabian Red Sea coastlands, particularly the south-western areas, including the Yemen.

84 METAGONITIDIM: The Metagonitae were a people living in Tangiers and the surrounding area. The district forms the west of Mauretania (Part 91) or modern Northern Morocco.

85 ASSYRIA: Eastern Iraq between the Tigris and the Iranian border.

86 AFRICA: Mediterranean coastal region of Libya, including Tripoli and the modern province of Tripolitania, but excluding the eastern part, for which see Cireniaca (Part 50) and Nasamonia (Part 51). The region also includes the eastern Algerian coastlands and the Algerian/Tunisian border. This is not the continent of Africa.

87 BACTRIANI: The people of Bactriana (Part 13).

88 AFNAN or AFRAN: Kelley: ‘Here appear people with one eye in their head, seeming to be in their breast, towards the Equinoctial.’

Dee: ‘I remember of people called Arimaspi.’

Dee is confused here, as the Arimaspi (‘the one-eyed’) were a people on the left bank of the Middle Volga, north of the Caspian Sea. The Afran are the people Ptolemy called the Aphricerones, located just north of Equatorial Africa in North Zaire. The ancient scholars considered that all the southern parts of Africa were uninhabitable (as with many unexplored lands) and populated with strange beasts. Herodotus included in his conjectures on unknown Africa descriptions of peoples with ‘one eye in the breast instead of the usual head’, which must be the people referred to.

89 PHRYGIA: Large province in Central Turkey. Greater Phrygia was bounded on the east by Cappadocia (Part 4).

90 CRETA: Crete.

91 MAURITANIA or MAURETANIA: Morocco and the north Algerian coastlands, not to be confused with the modern state of Mauritania, which is located further south and for which see Getulia (Part 19).

The Three Great Secret Names of God

At the very top of the hierarchy of the Elemental Tablet are the Three Great Secret Names of God. In the practice of modern Enochian magick, prior to contacting any angel from the Elemental Tablet, the Three Great Secret Names of God should be first be invoked. The Golden Dawn and Crowley incorporated the names in a preliminary temple opening. Whether you use these temple openings in your own work, or if you design your own opening ritual, you must never neglect to recognize by name the Three Great Secret Names of God who rule the Elemental Tablet you are working with.

The Seniors and the Kings

Next in hierarchical order are the six seniors and the king of the Elemental Tablet. After invoking the Three Great Secret Names of God, these seven angels must also be recognized by name and made part of the magician's opening ritual.

If you are invoking an individual senior, you may omit the names of the other seniors (but not the king) in your ritual opening.

Three Examples of Enochian Magick Visions

Nanta, elo Hoath zorge ef.

"Spirit of Earth, first worshiper friendly visit."

—LAIDROM, MARS SENIOR OF EARTH

Example 1[123]

First Session (September 25, 1980) Laidrom, Mars senior of the Elemental Tablet of Earth. Scryer: David P. Wilson.

For our first evocation session I decided we would work as Dee and Kelley did. One person would act as seer, and one as operator. The seer would recite the appropriate call, receive the vision, and communicate it during or after the session. The operator would banish, open and close the temple, and question the seer. I would be the operator, but I did not know who in our little class would be the first to sit in the visionary driver's seat. On class night there was only one rather reluctant volunteer.

David P. Wilson was not new to the world of magick. In the years leading up to his affiliation with our lodge he sat in with a host of magical groups and workshops in the Los Angeles area upon whom he later heaped scorn and ridicule because of their inability to show him “real magick.” He was the boldest member of the class, also the most impatient and sarcastic. I could see the Enochian class going down in flames on opening night because David the curmudgeon once again “saw nothing!” He had done none of the preliminary Enochian work with the rest of the class. He hadn't painted a set of tablets or studied any of the calls. Still, he was our only volunteer.

I can't recall why but I decided we would to try to contact LAIDROM, the Mars Senior of the Elemental Tablet of Earth. In the spirit of better safe than sorry, we placed the Earth tablet in the South (Capricorn/Cardinal Earth) and enclosed the entire class in a circle cast with a clothesline cord. I banished with the rituals of the lesser and greater pentagrams and hexagrams, then opened the temple and invoked the hierarchical names as indicated in Liber Chanokh. David was seated on the floor at the southern edge of the circle, just inches away from the Earth tablet. Leaning against the wall behind the tablet was a huge cardboard version of the [Elemental] Tablet of Earth that I placed there for the other members of the class to focus upon. I turned on the tape recorder and gave David a copy of the Call to read. I sat down behind him while he read it aloud.

He did rather well considering he had never read it before. When he was finished, he closed his eyes and took a deep breath. Nothing happened. I asked him to read the Call again. He did so and after only a few seconds he said, “I have a landscape. I see a landscape.”

I was relieved beyond words. “What does it look like?”

David proceeded to describe in surprising detail a desert vista of flat, trackless white crystalline powder stretching to the horizon. Great gray columns of volcanic rock towering over the plain broke the monotony of the scene. Between the columns the ground was pockmarked with countless gaping pits.

That was it. Nothing else was occurring. I asked him to read the Call a third time. This time there was movement. From out of a pit in the center of his field of vision arose a black cone. He said it sparkled from the inside and upon its surface with thousands of little sparks that jumped from one star to another.

I asked, “Is this LAIDROM?”

David grabbed his pencil and notepad and quickly scribbled something. I looked at what he had drawn. It looked like four very poorly drawn Enochian letters. At the time it meant nothing to me. I asked for a clearer answer. “Is this LAIDROM?”

“It's him! It's him! I see him.”

He described a humanoid figure draped in the same material from which the cone was constructed. He had an egg-shaped head but no face. His hands were like mittens—there were no fingers. He reached his arm toward the ground and “drew” a diagram in the sand in front of him. David quickly copied the figure on the notepad. It was a square divided diagonally by two lines with a small circle in the lower left-hand corner. We took this to be LAIDROM's signature.

We were all very excited. It was as if the entire class saw David's vision in our mind's eye. Then it occurred to me. Now that we've got this guy, what the hell are we to do with him? Before I could think of what to do next, David said, “Lon, I feel like … I feel … I could make strange sounds.”

This was a twist. “Let yourself.” I told him. “Go with it.” I tried to sound calm.

“Naw-n tahelo hoh athayzo raygayeff… this is bullshit!”

“No! Relax, let it happen!”

“I mean it, I feel like an idiot. I'm too … zil-zi-anzilzi-lo-da-arp nan-ta … (inaudible) … ef … efee thar-zi. I am sorry. That's all. Nothing like this has ever happened before. I just felt like doing it.” David's apology was comical. We all broke into nervous giggles.

It had been quite an evening. As we had planned nothing particular to do with LAIDROM, I thought it wise to quit while we were ahead. I asked David to thank our spirit guest for his visit and proceeded to banish and close the temple.

One of the class members had brought along his Enochian Dictionary[124] and suggested we try to use it to see if David's strange babbling actually meant something. I rewound the tape and played it back from the beginning. Everything was crystal clear right up to the time of LAIDROM's appearance, when the tape developed an irritating distortion. We joked that it was the fault of malicious spirits and expected it to soon clear up. It did not. In fact, by the time the tape reached David's babbling we could hardly pick his voice out from behind the bank of white noise. As soon as the good stuff was over, the distortion suddenly stopped.

Noise notwithstanding, after replaying the section of tape a dozen times or more, we picked up enough of what was being said to write down three audible strings of syllables:

naw-n tahelo hoh athayzo raygayeff.

zil-zi-anzilzi-lo-da-arp nan-ta … (inaudible) and ef … efee thar-zi.

Starting at the beginning, we painstakingly played with the phonetics of each word (and the word/words following) and attempted to match them with words in the Enochian Dictionary. Obviously we weren't being very scientific, nor, I confess, very objective. This was all very exciting and romantic, and I am sure that night we would have squeezed some profundity out of any string of sounds. Be that as it may, it took less than an hour to break the sounds up as follows:

Nanta, elo Hoath zorge ef.—Which translated neatly to: "Spirit of Earth, first worshiper friendly visit."

Zil zien—"stretch forth hands"

Zilodarp Nanta—"stretch forth and conquer Spirit of Earth"

Ef etharzi—"visit in peace."

Needless to say we were all very impressed. At the end of the evening it was agreed that from now on class would meet two times a week to pursue Enochian magick. Sadly, David's ability to break spontaneously into the Enochian language would diminish rapidly as his familiarity with the language of the Calls increased. After the fourth or fifth session, he lost the ability completely. His visions, on the other hand, became clearer, more informative, and more provocative.

Monday Night Magick Class (July 17, 2006) Twenty-ninth Aethyr Rii. Scryer: Jill Belanger

Enochian scrying sessions sometimes trigger emotional, physical, even sexual reactions. This is a clip from the transcription of a recording of a Monday night magick class scrying of the twenty-ninth Aethyr, Rii, and its governors: Vastrim, Odraxti, and Gomziam. The main scryer in this session was Jill Belanger, one of the class's most talented seers. It demonstrates that Enochian visions need not take the form of biblical-esque landscapes and heavy magical pronouncements. I thank Jill for being a very good sport and allowing us to eavesdrop on part of this provocative session.

This session started with the full opening ritual as outlined in chapter one.

As soon as I closed my eyes I was pulled into a vortex, an upside down six, and I was pulled in with an … um … another gentleman, a lover, a man, and we were instantly in sexual ecstasy going in water in the form of six, and just flying around, the flame was in the middle, and the water was swirling around, and I was lost in that ecstasy for a while. And then I thought, No, I've got to figure out what this message is about. So I tried to push him away. (Laughter from class.) And I said (very drunkenly), “Gumziam [sic], where are you? And I kept flying around in the water vortex. I then saw two triangles together but three dimensional, in sort of like (garbled) with three or four sides instead of eight sides, and then the two triangles … one split off from the other one. One on top, one on bottom, and the widest parts were together, and I was standing in the middle … and it was like the floor and ceiling were separating and apart.

And I looked down, and the floor was split into four parts, not like the Watchtowers, more like pyramids, and one was Fire, Water, Earth, and Air. Then it was stuck back together again, and I was swirling with the vortex again. I said, “Fire creates, but water solidifies,” and the two pyramids went back together, and I was with this lover again, floating around, and I was like, “OK! Let's … well … OK!” (Laughter from class.) I'm still kind of hot! (More laughter.)

Public Workshop (July 22, 2006) Thirtieth Aethyr, Tex. Scryer: name withheld

The following is a letter I received a few days after I returned home from a workshop series on Enochian vision magick. The vision the young woman describes occurred during a scrying session that concluded a half-day public workshop. She, like most of the attendees at this event, had never performed Enochian magick before.

After I had outlined a brief history of Dee and Kelley's adventures and the fundamentals of Enochian magick, the entire class took part in the ritual and chanting of the Ring/Lamen/Holy Table/Sigillum/Table of Nalvage opening ceremony. Over their two-part chorus of the Table of Nalvage words, I recited the nineteenth call to penetrate the thirtieth Aethyr, Tex. Here is her experience.

Hi, Lon!

Thanks again for making the trek here … last weekend. I learned a lot more than I had expected to, which is why I'm writing you this. I didn't get a chance to talk to you about the things I saw/did when you led the class foray into the Enochian aethyrs, and initially I was hesitant to because of the rather personal nature of some of it. But after talking to [my brother] about it, I realized I should tell you; in fact, he insisted I do so. So here goes.

We had just finished chanting the Holy Table, and you indicated we should close our eyes while you continued chanting and just follow the images that came to us. Initially I got not images per se, but random geometric shapes in dark shades of purple and green, mostly pyramids, and pyramids of one color in front of squares of a slightly darker shade. I realized that I was falling forward, swiftly, down a triangular corridor filled with a dark purplish haze, with occasional lighter purple flashes—like falling through layers and layers and layers, whoosh, whoosh, whoosh, with something spinning all around me at the same time. Then I realized I wasn't going down anymore, but rising, still through this triangular purple infused corridor, whoosh, whoosh, whoosh, still the spinning, and I began to feel my heart pounding like it would burst inside me, I felt dizzy and slightly nauseous, and just when I thought I couldn't stand it for another moment longer, I stopped speeding forward, and the purple mist cleared, and I was standing on a grassy plain, almost a hilltop, that rose slightly upward in front of me. I realized that the thing that had been spinning seemed to be the petals of an enormous flower, a lotus, perhaps, and that the hillside on which I stood was contained within its perimeter, like a low wall going around it. It occurs to me now that I was facing north.

Beyond the border of the wall were two more hills in the distance, one to the left and one to the right, covered in vibrant dark green vegetation, and I knew vaguely that there were Things in those hills, in those trees, but I didn't have time to think about them. There were four pillars that stretched up around me, at the outside edge of the wall, and as I watched, a pyramid rose up out of the hillside in front of me, or perhaps I simply moved swiftly up the hillside towards it. It wasn't large, maybe only one or one and a half stories high; it was four sided and made of a smooth golden brick or stone. A blinding light issued from the center of it, and, as I watched, the form of a person appeared in the center of this light and was walking towards me.

My impression was that he came from inside the pyramid, and he seemed to be coming from some distance, though the pyramid was just in front of me. He was tall and blond and blue eyed and wore a garment of brilliant white and a golden circlet about his temples. And he was smiling, he was so glad to see me. As he came close to me, he opened up the robe to reveal a column of blinding white light running down the centerline of his body. As my eyes adjusted to the light, I realized that the light was coming from his chakras, which were blazing yellow-white light and shaped sort of like flowers. I realized that my chakras were also blazing, and the light from his heart chakra leapt forward in a thin white-yellow tongue of flaming light and entered my heart chakra. Then his throat chakra flamed and leapt into mine, and then all of them at once seemed to, and that blazing sharing of chakra light continued for a few blissful, amazing moments.

He held his hands out in front of him, palms facing toward me, and I placed my palms against them, and the chakras in our hands blazed with light and fire for a moment. Then he took my hands and pulled them straight into his chest so that I held his heart chakra in my hands, and then he indicated that I should put his heart chakra inside my chest. I was amazed that he would suggest that, and slightly hesitant, but he was insistent, and together we thrust it into my chest. I was stunned at the force of the heat of the union of our two heart chakras. Then he gestured to his throat chakra, and again, I took his chakra in my hands, and lifted it out of him and into myself, with another flash of heat. Then I lifted out his third-eye chakra, then his solar plexus chakra, then his hara chakra. I reached next for his root chakra, and realized that in my hands it had become a huge golden phallus, and as in the curious logic of dreams, there was only one obvious way to integrate that into myself—I mounted it, and at the same time, I reached up and removed the crown from his head, symbolic of his crown chakra, and placed it on my own head at the same moment as the phallus slid into me, and the universe exploded. It wasn't sex, it wasn't copulation, it was Union, I was perfectly with and within him, and he was perfectly with and within me. It was Bliss, it was Light, it was Perfection. I heard his voice in my ear, saying, “You are She, in Whom all things are received; She in Whom all things are created; She in Whom all things are possible. All Life is Yes; all Love is Know. Know that You are She.”

At about that moment, I heard your voice saying something about looking around for landmarks that would help me remember this place, and I laughed to myself that I wasn't likely to forget this. You said something else about bringing back a sign, or a key or talisman from this place, something to know and remember it by that would help me return, and I pulled back slightly from this Being with a wordless question, and his answer was to withdraw from me, and he ejaculated into my outstretched hands, a liquid golden light that turned into two glowing, golden diamond crystals that sank into my palms and disappeared as I watched.

Then your voice said it was time to return, and without another word or glance between us I was whisked up and away, coming back into awareness of my body with a nauseating thud, my head spinning, my heart pounding painfully. You started asking us questions about what we'd seen, where we'd been, and I was too nauseated and out of breath to answer, but was amazed to hear my classmates describing similar imagery, lotuses, columns, towers, pyramids, though no one else seemed to have experienced anything close to what had passed between me and that other Being—or at least, no one was admitting to it. I sat there in a haze, listening to them, thinking about my own experience, and waiting for my heart to quit pounding, my stomach to stop churning. I must have looked pretty stunned, because [my husband] asked me if I was OK, and all I could initially articulate to him as he looked over at me was, "What the f___ just happened to me?"

We broke for dinner at about that moment, and I realized my opportunity to share it with the class had passed. But I still wanted to tell you about it, and, of course, [my husband]. We had driven separate cars that day, so we met at the house before going to the restaurant, and there at home I told him. He stared at me while I told him about it, saying it was pretty amazing, but I'd better not say anything about it in front of the class as a whole, that it was way too personal to just lay out there that way. He suggested I call [my brother], that he'd be able to decode it for me and would definitely be interested. I agreed, but thought at the same time that I really should tell you, but wanted to do so in private.

We went to dinner and then to the meet and greet with the class, but I held back, there were always too many people around. Perhaps now, after reading my account, you understand my hesitancy. Because to be honest, I wasn't sure how to begin, I was still unsure of myself, unsure of how to confess to someone I had only just met that under his direction I had experienced a union that was way more than sexual with someone who was apparently a Being of Light, a resident of the angelic realms, and also not sure of what that said about me. But I knew who would know what it all meant, and so as soon as I got home on Sunday, I called my brother and told the whole story to him. He was jubilant, congratulatory, awestruck, and then he asked me, "Well, what did Lon say when you told him?" I had to admit that I hadn't been sure of what or how to communicate it, and had been further stymied by my husband's reaction to it. My brother was incredulous. How could I not have shared that vision with you, who of all people, would understand it and sympathize with my bewilderment at it? I should have told you everything, he insisted. I agreed and promised him I would write you. And so here we are.

My brother was curious to know which of the Aethyrs you had us reading from, and I couldn't remember; my husband thinks you said we were only going to push ourselves up a level, but my brother thinks I went farther than that and said you might recognize which one. There were things about the place that I recognized from dreams—it's a place I've dreamed of my whole life but never consciously remembered until now. I'm not unaccustomed to visions and vision quests, but this was unlike anything I've ever done before. My body's reaction to it was visceral; I crashed hard when I came back from it, and I continued to feel the physical aftereffects for several days (kind of like recovery from a bad acid trip). Today, Thursday, I'm finally feeling back up to steam. My brother said that's a normal reaction to astral projection; is that really what I did? I have my own theories about the imagery and symbolism. I'm a massage therapist and energy worker, a master of the Usui and Karuna systems of Reiki, and the student of a spirit guide who was a Native American shaman. The ejaculation of light that turned into crystals and sank into my palms resonates with me on several levels. I think one possible meaning is that it was a gift to use in my healing work. I can tell you that all this week, whenever I've “turned on” the Reiki or use one of the symbols, the chakras in my palms blaze with heat, my patients have actually commented on it! (In fact, they're heating up right now, just thinking about it.) [My brother] didn't exactly discount my idea about it, but he said there was a lot more mystical significance there than I realized, or than he should even talk to me about until I talked to you. Obviously, it's loaded with archetypal images, but I would love to know what you get from them, what level you sent me to, and if you recognize anything from my descriptions.

Thanks for your patience. This has turned from an email into a novella! I eagerly await your reply!

Brightest blessings!

[18] In magick, "invocation" usually refers to the calling into oneself the presence or the essence of Deity; "evocation" usually refers to calling forth a spiritual entity (angel, spirit, demon, etc.) into the magician's triangle of art, there to be constrained and charged to do the magician's bidding. Theoretically, once the magician has successfully invoked the divine presence within himself or herself, he or she then has the divine authority to evoke the spirits.

51 The letter b (or Pa in the angelic alphabet) is used liberally in Heptarchic and Enochian magick. The frequency of its appearance has prompted some modern scholars to speculate that it represents the number seven, the key or foundational number of Dee and Kelley's angelic magick.

97 INRI is an acronym of the Latin phrase Iesvs Nazarenvs Rex Iudaeorvm, “Jesus the Nazarene, King of the Jews.” It appears in the Gospel of John (chapter 19, verse 19). The four letters also have pro-found esoteric meanings to Christian mystics and ceremonial magicians, who see in the letters a magical formula of creation and being.

98 In astrology it is the four fixed, or kerubic, signs of the zodiac that exemplify the purest elemental quality. For example, there are three zodiac signs that represent the element of Fire: Aries, Leo, and Sagittarius. Aries is the cardinal or initial aspect of Fire, Leo is the fixed (kerubic) or firmly defined aspect of Fire, and Sagittarius is the mutable and most easily influenced aspect of Fire.

The four fixed (kerubic) signs of the zodiac are: Aquarius (Air), Scorpio (Water), Taurus (Earth), and Leo (Fire). The classic symbols of the fixed signs (the angel of Aquarius, the eagle of Scorpio, the bull of Taurus, and the lion of Leo) are called the kerubic emblems and appear often in Christian iconography.

121 Meric Casaubon. A True & Faithful Relation of What passed for many Yeers Between Dr. John Dee and some Spirits, London, 1659, p.153; and pp.153–159 for all quotations following.

122 Dee, like most of his contemporaries, believed the island of Friseland to exist. It was, in fact, a duplication of Iceland on an early map, an error which was repeated. When its coast was supposedly skirted, this was actually the coast of Cape Farewell, Southern Greenland. Note also that today Germania (Part 29) incorporates Poland. In Dee's time Poland was located further eastward and would have formed part of Sarmatia or Russia (Part 46).

123 The following is taken from chapter 20 of my book My Life with the Spirits: The Adventures of a Modern Magician (York Beach, ME: Weiser Books, 1999), 138–141.

About the Author

Lon Milo DuQuette is a bestselling author and lecturer, whose books on Magick, Tarot, and the Western Mystery Traditions have been translated into ten languages. He is currently U.S. Deputy Grand Master of Ordo Templi Orentis and is on the faculty of the Omega Institute in Reinbeck, NY and the Maybe Logic Academy. Among his many books, he is the author of My Life with the Spirits (Weiser 1999), Understanding Aleister Crowley's Thoth Tarot (Weiser 2003), The Magick of Aleister Crowley (Weiser 2003), and Tarot of Ceremonial Magick (Weiser 1995). He lives in Costa Mesa, CA with his wife Constance. Visit him on the Web at: www.lonmiloduquette.com.

Having mastered the arts and science of his age, Elizabethan magus Dr. John Dee [1527–1608] resolved that worldly knowledge could no longer provide him the wisdom he desired. He turned his attention to magick, and in 1582 he and his clairvoyant partner Edward Kelley made contact with a number of spiritual entities who identified themselves as angels—the same angels that communicated with Adam, Enoch, and the patriarchs of the Old Testament. Over the next three years three distinct magical systems were revealed to Dee and Kelley. The third, thanks largely to efforts from the adepts of the Hermetic Order of the Golden Dawn and the 20th-century practices of Aleister Crowley, is now widely known as Enochian Magick.

Enochian Vision Magick includes extensive background and historical notes, explores the foundation for the creation of the Enochian Magick system, and provides readers with a step-by-step process for using it.

"Lon DuQuette is a miracle worker, and Enochian Vision Magick is his greatest miracle. His uncanny gift for clear and simple explanations has produced the most accessible, interesting, personal and—most importantly—practical guide to Enochian magick available."

—Richard Kaczinski, Ph.D., author of Perdurabo: The Life of Aleister Crowley

"DuQuette has created a truly original and highly interesting vision of the practical application of the Enochian System. He treats the material as Dee intended it to be treated—as a gateway into another world."

—Geoffrey James, editor and translator of The Enochian Evocation of Dr. John Dee

"It has fallen to Lon Milo DuQuette to provide an easy entrance to the Watchtowers of Dee's magic. In doing so he has done modern magic a great service."

—Stephen Skinner, co-author of The Practical Angel Magic of Dr. John Dees's Enochian Tables

"We are lucky to finally have a useful introduction to this difficult subject that provides the aspiring Enochian conjurer with both the proper foundation and the tools to successfully begin what can become a lifelong adventure and labor of love."

—David R. Jones, Master of The Black Lodge of Santa Cruz

TO ALL Ingeniouſly Elaborate STUDENTS, In the moſt Divine Myſteries OF Hermetick Learning.

I Here preſent you with a Summary Collection of the choiſeſt Flowers, growing in the Hermetick Gardens, ſorted and bound up in one compleat and lovely Poſie. A way whereby Painful Inquiſitors avoid the uſual diſcouragements met with in a tedious wandering through each long Walk, or winding Maze; which are the ordinary and guilful Circumſtances, wherewith envious Philoſophers have inlarged their Labors;

purpoſely

purpoſely to puzzle or weary the moſt reſolved undertakings. 'Tis true, the manner of delivery uſed by the Ancients upon this Subject, is very far removed from the common path of Diſcourſe; yet I beleeve they were conſtrained (for the weight and majeſty of the Secret) to invent thoſe occult kinde of expreſſions in Ænigmaes, Metaphors, Parabols, and Figures.

Now amongſt the Catalogue of Authors that have treated of this ſacred Learning, I have chiefly obſerved four ſorts.

The firſt are ſuch whoſe wel-mindedneſs and honeſty, have cauſed them to lay down the whole Myſtery faithfully and plainly; giving you a Clew, as well as ſhewing you a Labyrinth; and they onely are to be ſtudied.

The ſecond are thoſe whoſe Magiſterial handling a part or branch thereof, did it rather to diſcover themſelves Maſters, then with intent to inſtruct others: Theſe may be read, but they are too ſublime for thoſe, who ſtand in need of an Introduction.

Others there are, who out of Ignorance or Miſtake, have delivered blinde and and unbottomed Fictions; which have too much deluded and abuſed the credulous World: ſo that of this ſort I may ſay (not blemiſhing the honor, which ſome of them have juſtly acquired in other parts of learning,) their Works are like Pigmaleons Image, [full of exquiſite proportion, feature, delicacie, and beauty, but not animated with the life and ſoul of Truth;] and whileſt a man conſults with ſuch, he ſhall always doubt, whether what he reads be to the matter, or not: However the Judicious may ſmell their levity by the rankneſs of their impertinancies.

But the laſt and worſt ſort of all, are thoſe, who through Envy have ſcattered abroad their unfaithful recipies and falſe gloſſes; (taking for preſident the Devil that can ſow tares; and transform himſelf into an Angel of light) with intent to choak and obfuſcate the more evident light of the plain dealing Philoſophers: And to diſcern theſe Impoſtures, requires a Judgment able to divide a Hair.

From this variety of Writers it is; that many, otherwiſe ſtedy Mindes are toſt up and down, as from Racket to Racket; being forced to change their Thoughts, as oft as they change their Authors, and conceiving they have ſetled right upon a Point, (juſt like tickliſh Weather-cocks,) are neceſſitated to ſhift with the next puff, (although but of an empty windy conceit:) New diſcoveries begetting new opinions, which raiſe more untoward and turbulent Doubts, then their greateſt ſtrength of Judgment can conjure down. Thus (unhappy men!) thinking themſelves ready to Anchor, a croſs guſt blows them off the ſhore; perhaps into a rougher ſea of Debate and Perplexity then before, and with greater hazard and danger of ſplitting.

I know that the truth of the proper Argent, its Preparation, and the Fire, (the three moſt important ſteps to this bleſſed Work) with the whole proceſs, is by ſome Philoſophers ſo ſincerely laid down and unfolded, that to a knowing Artiſt it is a cauſe of much wonder, why he that reads (though but ſmatteringly acquainted with Nature) ſhould not meet with cleer ſatisfaction: But here's the reaſon, Many are called, but few are choſen: 'Tis a Haven towards which many skilful Pilots have bent their courſe, yet few have reacht it. For as amongſt amongſt the people of the Jews, there was but one that might enter into the Holy of Holies, (and that but once a yeer,) ſo there is ſeldom more in a Nation, whom God lets into this Sanctum Sanctorum of Philoſophy; yet ſome there are. But though the number of thoſe Elect are not many, and generally the fathom of moſt mens Fancies, that attempt the ſearch of this vaſt and ſubtil Myſtery, too narrow to comprehend it, and their ſtrongeſt Reaſon too weak to pierce the depth it lies obſcured in; being indeed ſo unſearchable and ambiguous, it rather exacts the ſacred and courteous Illumination of a Cherub, then the weak aſſiſtance of a Pen to reveal it. Yet let no Man deſpair: For ſurely there is a ſpirit in man, and the inſpiration of the Almighty giveth underſtanding; and though all things before us ſeem huddled up in a deformed Chaos, yet can he place them in comlineſs and order. For many Philoſophers cloſely ſhut up, or concealed divers things, which they left the ingenious Inquirer to ſift into, or finde out; preſuming to whom God intended the diſcovery of the Wonder, he would afford Eyes that ſhould pierce through the miſt of Words, and give them a ray of light which ſhould lead them through this darkneſs: To finde out that Path which no Fowl knoweth, and which the Vultures eye hath not ſeen: For, if ſeriouſly peruſed, you ſhall finde their Books are much like Drawers, that lead to ſome choiſe and ſecret Box in a Cabinet, [one opening the way to the reſt] which if heedfully revolved, the ſatisfaction you miſs of in one Author, will be met with in another, and all perhaps may at length diſcover ſuch pregnant and ſublime Secrets; as ſhall manifeſt thee to be one of thoſe choſen veſſels, ordained to be informed of this Knowledg, which ſometimes God hath hid from the wiſe and prudent, but revealed unto Babes.

Whoſoever therefore undertakes the ſearch of this abſtruſe and ſecret Learning, muſt know it requires heedful and piercing Judgments, apt and cleer Fancies, faithful and diſtinct Conceptions: For the Philoſophers writings are not onely interwoven with moſt exquiſite cunning and ingenious artifice, but the Golden Thred of the Matter is ſo warily diſpoſed, covertly concealed, and ſo broken off and diſperſt; (they being ever fearful to afford too early light or ſatisfaction to the Readers,) that unleſs the Father of Illuminations prompt, or lend an Angels hand to guide, the beſt principled Student may be loſt in tracing its ſeveral Meanders, and fall ſhort of finding out its ſcattered ends. Be wary then in the application of words (for therein the Imagination is ſubject to many miſcarriages, being apt to twiſt and bow each Sentence to the various frame of its preſent Conceptions, and the unwary diſcoveries it firſt makes:) Eſpecially thoſe words which appear to lie moſt naked; for where the Philoſophers ſeem to ſpeak plaineſt, there they have written nothing at all; or elſe in ſuch ordinary expreſſions, have wrapt up ſome ſenſe, highly myſterious: Generally fitting their diſcourſe with Words, that like the Delphian Sword will cut both ways, or reach to a larger extenſion or latitude, then ſome Conceptions can ſtretch them too; intending and ayming at things beyond, (and ſometimes below) what we ſuppoſe thoſe bare expreſſions diſcover.

In fine, they have ſet before us a task for Explanation, other then is uſed in our ordinary beaten track of Diſcourſe: which he that will well underſtand, muſt firſt be maſter of the language of Nature, having run through the diſcouragements of the tedious progreſs, and laborious difficulty of joyning her Letters, and ſpelling her Syllables.

Tis true, the dignity of this infallible Myſtery lies open to many hard Cenſures, and profane Scandals, ſo well known, I need not mention them; but that thereby I ſhall endevour to remove, and purge this pure and heroick Science (almoſt generally contemptible) from the droſs, and corruption of an Impoſture.

Commonly we ſhall finde them moſt traduce it as falſe and deceitful, who (having the repute of Schollers) pretend to have ſpent much time and induſtry in the ſearch thereof; and becauſe it is dreſt in ſuch variety of flouriſh and figurative Speeches, that their ſhallow underſtandings cannot eaſily pierce into it; (their wilde unhappy Fancies like ſo many Tailors ſhops ful of various ſhreds of Conceits, making up out of ſuch changeable colours at beſt but a Fools Coat:) They profeſs all the diſcoveries thereof to be meer Chimeraes, and it ſelf a ſtudied Fable. But the Egyptians might as well deny light in the Land of Goſhen, becauſe themſelves lived in darkneſs, or we, if either of the Luminaries ſuffer defect to our view, conclude that the Eclipſe is Univerſal.

If theſe (otherwiſe well accompliſht) Men, would but conſider how many occult, ſpecifick, incomprehenſible, and inexplicable qualities there lies dormant and obſcured in Nature, of which no abſolute or true account can be rendered by themſelves: As the concatenation of Spirits, their working without the Body, the Weapon Salve, the Sympathetical Powder, the Vertues of the Loadſtone, the wonderful and never to be enough admired Secrets of Magnetick Philoſophy, and Natural Magick: As alſo what Art it ſelf is able to perform, by the power of Mathematical concluſions, in Geometry, Numbers, both myſterious and vulgar, Perſpective Opticks, &c. What famous and accurate Works, induſtrious Artiſts have furniſhed theſe latter Ages with, and by Weights, Wheels, Springs or Strings, have imitated lively Motion, as Regiomantanus his Eagle, and Fly, Drebler's perpetual Motion, the Spring in a Watch, and ſuch like Self-Movers, (Things that ſeem to carry with themſelves (like living Creatures) the principles of their own Motions, and unallied to any outward Object, except onely to ſet them going :) The Arts of Navigation, Printing, and making of Gunpowder (which for the honor of our Countryman Roger Bacon, I the rather mention, who lived above a hundred yeers before we heard of its original from the German Monk, and certainly knew its whole Compoſition ; but that his pious Thoughts (finding it might prove ſo ſwift and deviliſh a deſtruction to Men, Cities, Caſtles, &c.) would not ſuffer him to reveal the way of making it, though he plainly diſcovered its Nature, force, and horrible execution ; (as appears in the ſixt Chapter of his learned Epiſtles De Secretis operibus Artis & Naturæ.) In a word, what marvellous concluſions, Art (making uſe of Nature for an Inſtrument) can perform, without the help of ſo low and inferior aſſiſtants as Characters, Charms, or Spells, (and yet theſe have their ſeveral powers, if judiciouſly and warily diſpoſed and handled ;) inſomuch, that no man that underſtands the ſafe and honeſt power of Art and Nature, can juſtly aſperſe their Legitimate Children, as though they were the off-ſpring (or indeed had any relation) to Diabolical Arts. From which few particulars, I might infer many other wonders poſſible to be wrought, which yet to appearance or probability, are beyond the power of accompliſhment: and where the various productions of Nature, Art, or both, have given the levity and infidelity of many mens Judgments, the lie; whoſe prejudicate thoughts would never beleeve a thing could be done, till they found (beyond evaſion or denial) it was done.] I ſay, if ſuch men would but ſeriouſly conſider theſe and the like miraculous effects, they might be of force ſufficient to perſwade the moſt doubtful amongſt them, that Art with the help of Nature, may arrive at ſuch perfection, to work Wonders, as far beyond theſe, as theſe would be beyond their apprehenſions, had they never heard of them before; nay to beleeve, there is nothing incredible either in divine or humane things : and yet they never become ſo happy Favorites as to be made privy to the myſteries of this Cunning.

Another Error theſe curious Brains run into, is, That they look beyond Nature, and often deſpiſe the Path for the Plainneſs thereof, ſuppoſing it too vulgar to conduct them to ſuch rare and intricate Wonders; whereas they conſider not, that Nature in all her productions, works plainly, eaſily, and without inforcement. Briefly, ſuch ought to ſuſpect as falſe, all things that appear not feaſable, without it excel in ſubtilty, or be rackt upon the Tenter : And this is the Rock, againſt which divers ſuffer ſhipwrack, apprehending they ought to place the materials of this glorious and magnificent building, in more remote and ſtrange things, then really it is.

Some again calumniate and ſcandalize this ſerious and divine work, as a fictitious thing, and they are ſuch, whoſe eaſie confidence (forgetting the cautionary Items of the Philoſophers) beleeve all true they once finde Written : And when after tedious and chargeable Chymical operations, (the expreſſions of the the Philoſophers ſeeming to look that way) they finde no reality in the Experiments anſwerable to their expectations; but all prove as defective in their production, as the birth of Ericthonius was imperfect; then in a diſcontented humor (perhaps having been cheated to boot) ruine (with their good opinion of the thing) all they have before undertaken. But it is no wonder if they be at much expence, that make uſe of many things: What need is there of ſo vain a uſe of many Glaſſes, ſo much blowing of the Coals, ſuch conſumption of Fire, and other impertinent and expenſive preparations: When the Philoſophers tell us, One Glaſs, one Furnace, one Fire, (and that an immaterial one, not to be found in the Furnace of the Chymiſts,) is ſufficient to perfect the work; which whoſoever attempts, and cannot firſt fancy the Complement thereof to be gone through without charge, (at leaſt very little or inconſiderable) let them leave off, and deſiſt; leſt the conſumption of their wealth leave their hearts as cold, as the drudging in a falſe Fire hath made their faces pale.

Others there are that clamor, and cry out out againſt this guiltleſs Learning, whoſe covetous deſires have made them ruſh upon the practiſe ſo far, that they are forced to retreat by weeping croſs. It is the common Fate of the Covetous to meet with a Cheat, and the ſmooth ſtories of a Quack do oftentimes ſet ſo delightful and eager edg upon their griping deſires, (which doubtleſs a Knaviſh genius may cunningly carry on) that the confiding Miſer ſhall never diſtruſt him, till he be ſet to rake among the Aſhes for his wealthy return. And as unskilful men cannot uſe too much warineſs, if they be to deal with any that pretends to teach the proceſs of this Myſtery; ſo they cannot take too much good adviſe to avoid their illuſions. By way of Caution therefore, beware of thoſe mercenary pretenders, that (boaſting much of their abilities) offer to diſcover you any of thoſe Secrets; upon condition you give them ſuch or ſuch a ſum of money; for by this tinkling ſound you ſhall judg them counterfeit metal. Never was this Holy Myſtery communicated to ſo wicked a man, as ever would or durſt make ſale of it; or indeed do ſuch men ſtand in need. They want not Money, or are neceſſitated to condition for a Trifle, that poſſeſs ſo great and unexhauſtible a treaſure; for length of days is in her right hand, and in her left hand, riches and honor. Therefore who hath this, hath all: it incircling within it ſelf, all temporal felicity, health of body, and all good fortune.

Next, truſt not thoſe that proſtitute their skill; theſe are the Waſps that creep into the Hive of Hermes: ſuch Vagrants doubtleſs are empty and unfraught, and have more uſe of what they may skrew out of you, then you can make benefit of what may be gained from them. It is a Jewel of that price and eſtimation, that they who finde themſelves once bleſt with its poſſeſſion, entertain it as Lot did his Angels; who would rather deliver up his onely daughters, [his dear and neareſt comforts] then expoſe ſuch choiſe Gueſts into the hands of wicked men, not daring to make the Secret common, leſt they become breakers of the Celeſtial Seals; much more to betray it into untruſty hands, for any gain or benefit.

But beſides theſe, the generality of the World are nurſt up in a belief, there is no ſuch thing : Firſt, becauſe they never heard of any that publikely profeſt it, or by viſible operations manifeſted its truth in any age. Secondly, in regard they as ſeldom found any Man, that (by his Condition or Converſation) made evident ſhew to the World, that he was poſſeſſor of ſuch a wealthy Science: Many of the Profeſſors commonly living miſerably poor, who though they boaſt what vaſt Treaſures they can command, yet ſcarce are ſeen to have a penny in their purſe, or a whole Rag to their backs.

To the firſt, I anſwer, That there are divers things which peculiarly grow within the bowels of the Earth, and ſeem as buried to us, becauſe they neither bud forth or grow up; and withal, there being ſo few Adepted Prieſts in the World, it is no wonder, the Ceremonies of ſo divine a Miracle, ſhould be both ſeldom and privately celebrated.

To the ſecond, That there is, that maketh himſelf rich, and hath nothing; and that maketh himſelf poor, having great riches. For on whomſoever God out of his eſpecial grace, is pleaſed to beſtow this Bleſſing, he firſt fits them for a moſt vertuous life, to make them the more capable and worthy of it; and being ſo qualified, they ſtraightway lay aſide ambitious thoughts, and take up a retiredneſs;they dwell within their Root, and never care for flouriſhing upon the Stage of the World: The conſideration of this Magiſtery being theirs; does more fill their Mindes,then all the Treaſures of the Indies, were they entailed upon them, (it being not to be valued, becauſe it is the ſummity and perfection of all Terreſtrial Sciences;) nor indeed need ſuch regard the airy and empty glory of Magnifying-Fame; that can command an abſolute Content in all things. Nay, ſome loſe their vain glory ſo far,as none ſhall ſcarce ever hear them mention it; counting nothing more advantageous, then to conceal what they enjoy. For, as it is a Secret, of the higheſt nature and concernment; ſo God will not ſuffer it to be revealed to any, but thoſe that can tell how to conceal a Secret; and if we rightly weigh this, that the poſſeſſion of the thing takes from the poſſeſſors, the root of all evil, [Covetouſneſs;] how then can any corrupt or ſiniſter thoughts grow up in them?

It is alſo worthy conſideration, how many eminent dangers, troubles, fears, and inconveniences, the very ſuſpition of having the Stone, hath intitled ſome Men to; and how many ſeveral ways their lives have been attempted, by powerful and wicked men; becauſe they concealed the Myſtery from them. But let the reward of thoſe who would forcibly ſtrip this Secret from any breſt, be like that of the Sodomites, which would have Lot deliver them his Angels, [Blindneſs in the eyes of their underſtandings,] to waſte out their time in ſeeking the Door that lets in to this knowledg, but never finde it.

Furthermore, this Learning is not revealed by any Maſter, but under the moſt weighty Ties and Obligations of an Oath; and that by long tryal and experience of a mans fidelity, vertue, judgment, diſcretion, faithfulneſs, ſecreſie, deſires, inclinations, and converſation: to ſift and try whether he be capable and deſerving; for the neereſt Relation. (unleſs exactly qualified with merit) cannot obtain this knowledg from them Every Childe cannot be an Heir, nor every boſom Friend an Executor. An thi this ſtrict care is taken, leſt the Learner ſhould miſapply his Talent, by ſerving the Ambition of evil men, or ſupporting wicked and unjuſt Intereſts; to domineer with violence and oppreſſion, perhaps to the trampling under foot the general Peace: For doubtleſs a ſevere account will be exacted by God at the Teachers hand, if the Learner ſhould miſgovern or abuſe this ſo great a Grace.

It is ſaid, Wiſdom which findes out Knowledg and Counſel, dwells with Prudence. A Conſcientious breſt muſt keep it moſt religiouſly inviolable, if once obtained: Stability and Conſtancy nuſt be reſolved on by the undertaker, ver flying that inconſtant humor, which ometimes leads men on, with too greedy n appetite, and a while after withdraws nd cools. Such fickle and wavering Diſpoſitions ſhould leave off betimes, eſt they meet with thoſe freſh conceipts, hat ſhall winde and turn their Fancies o many ſeveral ways, that at length like 'entheus (diſtracted with irreſolution) hey can ſetle no where; and how apt uch inconſtant Seekers are for this Work, heir imperfect productions will bear nem witneſs.

Another needful Caution may be given, and that proverbially: Haſte makes waſte. This miſchievous Evil is commonly forwarded by an over-covetous deſire; and this is that grand enemy to the Work, which often proves the ruine of all. He muſt therefore perſevere in his undertakings, and patiently contemplate on Natures ſlow and leiſurely progreſs in the bringing forth of her beſt things. It is not a Matter that is throughly apprehended at firſt, upon a ſlight or ſuperficial view: The Philoſophers that raiſed this Fabrick, did it by many degrees, and it is by their ſteps we muſt make our Aſcenſion to thoſe high Wonders. Do not then preſume, (though your underſtanding be able to build a Structure) that it is ſtrongly o exactly compiled; unleſs you finde i raiſed from a ground that is ſincerely plain and natural, managed and ſquared by the ſtrict Rules of Art. And conſidering that your Errors may prove fundamental, (for whoſoever miſſes hi way at the entrance, ſhall build upon ſo unſound a Foundation, as allows of no emendations, but a new beginning: You can never uſe too much Caution in your Courſe, or be over ſedulous in the guidance of your underſtanding. It is wiſdom to anatomize and diſſect every apprehenſion clearly, and examine what the operations of the Minde have effected; and in what manner the Senſes convey them unto you: And as you walk along, heedfully to obſerve, where the principal Thred is broken off, and then ſearch about where it is likely to be met with again; for doubtleſs the ends thereof are poſſible to be found out, if heedfully traced. However, if yet what you apprehend does not ſo exactly hit the mark; return to the ſtudy of Nature, there dwell, and look round to diſcover the beſt Way; caſt about again for a new Scent, and leave no path unſearched, nor no buſh unbeaten; for though you readily finde not the real Truth, yet peradventure you may meet with ſuch ſatisfaction, as will quiet your Reaſon, and make you take pleaſure in the ſearch. And he that once begins to love Wiſdom for its own ſake, ſhall ſooner be acquainted with her, then he that courts her for any ſiniſter or by reſpect: wherefore in this ſenſe may be taken that of our Saviour, He that hath much, ſhall receive more; but he that hath little, ſhall be taken away, even that which he hath. Eliſha obtained the ſight of the Horſes and Chariots of Fire, that carried Elias up into Heaven; but it was not till he had deſired, that a double portion of his ſpirit might reſt upon him. And Eliſha's ſervant ſaw the Mountains full of Horſes and Chariots of Fire; but not till his Maſter had prayed to the Lord to open his eyes: If thy Thoughts are devout, honeſt, and pure, perhaps God may at one time or other, lay open to thy Underſtanding, ſomewhat that will truly and faithfully lead thee to the Knowledg of this Myſtery. Solomons ſlothful man that fears the Lyon in the way, muſt not venture into theſe Streets of Wonders; where are Remoraes that will puzzle or abate the moſt forward and ſevere Inquiries, and quench the thirſt and deſire of fartheſt ſearch. In our progreſs, the higher we go, the more ſhall we better our proſpect; it is not a level or a flat, that can afford us the benefit of diſcovery to a Knowledg, and Learning ſo remote.

Aſtrologers well know the ſecret Chambers of the South, and that there are Stars that have influence under the depreſſion of the South Pole, though not viſible in our Hemiſphere. As therefore in Filtration, we muſt lay the drawing ſide of the Filter, as low or lower, then the ſuperficies of Water, from whence it draws, elſe it hath not power to bring up any thing; ſo we muſt ſearch as deep as the ancients Fountain, ere we ſhall be able to draw any water out of their Wells; which if once obtained, the time for operation is beſt known by a fit Election, wherein the Rules of Aſtrology are to be conſulted with; in which Science, the Practiſers of this Art ought to be well read for the ſeveral uſes, that continually and neceſſarily muſt be made thereof.

I profeſs, for my ſelf, it is a ſatisfying Contentment, that I can finde ſome probable grounds for the poſſibility of ſuch an Enterpriſe; it is no more incredible to me, that from plain and ſimple principles, it may be exalted to ſuch an height, even beyond perfection, then to ſee the ſtrings of Inſtruments, (framed and compoſed of ſo baſe, and neglected things, as the Guts of Cats) ſhould be able (through degrees of refining,) to afford ſuch ſweet, mellow, and admirable Muſick. Nor is it a mean degree of happineſs, I conceive my ſelf ſeated in, that in ſo great a depth of Myſtery, I am inabled to diſcover ſome little Light, though but glimmering and imperfect: If I enjoy no more but onely to live in the Womb of ſuch Knowledg, or if with a dim reflex (from this Rock of Fleſh) I ſee no more then the back parts of this Divine Science, though the glory hath paſſed by to the Ancients before; it will contribute much to the quieting of my ſolicitous, and waking Inquiries.

We are not a little beholding to the induſtry of our Anceſtors, for collecting into Books this Elemented Water falling from Heaven, as into ſo many ſeveral Veſſels or Ciſterns; and there reſerving it for our times and uſe; which elſe would have ſoaked away, and inſenſibly loſt it ſelf in the Earth of Oblivion. But as to the freeing us from the toyl and diſcouragement of a tedious and irregular ſearch, (many Philoſophers pointing but at one part of the Myſtery, in the whole bundle of their Treatiſes;) we are eternally obliged to our Author, for ſo highly befriending us with theſe learned Collections, of the onely few and pertinent Things, from the reſt of their large and unneceſſary Diſcourſes, (and that from their writings who were unqueſtionably bleſt with the knowledg of this Divine Myſtery,) even as a skilful Chymiſt, who by Spagyrical operations, ſeparates the groſs and earthy from the more fine and pure, and out of a large Maſs, extracts onely the Spirit. And though it is not to be denied, that the Philoſophers left many Lights behinde them, yet is it as true they left them incloſed in dark lanthorns, and us to ſearch them out in corners: But here our Author hath brought them out of that obſcurity, and placed them before us in a branched Candleſtick, whereby we may view them all at once, and where like a full Conſort of Inſtruments each ſounds his part to make the harmony compleat; ſo that it will evidently appear to the Judicious and Learned, that theſe Collections were not raſhly, or with ſlight choice, ſnatcht or ſtript from the whole bulk of Authors; but with a wary and heedful Judgment, culled out and ſelectly choſen; and what the Ancients delivered ſcattered, and confuſed, is by his elaborate pains diſpoſed in ſo advantageous a Method, that we are much the neerer to finde out the right path by the order wherein he hath ranked their ſayings: yet not ſo, that the whole Proceſs lies juſt in that Methodical Chain, as ſeems linked together by each Paragraph; but that the ſame is here and there intermixt, and irregularly purſued; ſometimes the beginning being diſpoſed in the middle, the middle in the end, &c. And beſides, part of the Philoſophers ſentences may (and muſt) as well be referred to other Chapters, and under other Heads; and left for the induſtrious and painful Contemplator to ſet and joyn together. His Expoſitions in the Corollaries are very remarkable, rendering him a man of a moſt piercing Intellect and ſingular Judgment, and letting in much light to the dark phraſes of the Philoſophers; ſo that indeed they ſhew rather the effects of Experience, then Contemplation. In a word, The work is like the Sun, which though it ſeems little, yet it is all light.

For the Author himſelf, I muſt not be ſilent in what I have learned, though his Work render him ſufficiently famous, ſpecially being reported to me, to be a Gentleman, Noble, ingenious, and deſerving. He was Son to that excellent Phyſitian, Doctor John Dee, (whoſe fame ſurvives by his many learned and precious Works, but chiefly celebrated amongſt us, for that his incomparable Mathematical Preface to Euclids Elements) and chief Phyſitian to the Emperor of Ruſſia, being made choice of, and recommended by King James, to the ſaid Emperor, upon his requeſt, to ſend him over one of his Phyſitians. In this imployment, he continued fourteen yeers, being all that time Munificently entertained, as his merits and abilities well deſerved. Upon his return into England, he brought moſt ample Teſtimonies of his own worth, and Emperial Commendations to his late Majeſty; and ſince retired to Norwich, where he now lives, And may he yet live the full poſſeſſor of that honor due to his Eminent parts.

Touching the Tranſlation, I have as faithfully performed it, and given it as plain a Verſion, as the dignity of the Subject will allow; the better to fit it to their their Underſtandings, who have wanted the aſſiſtance of being bred Scholars, and yet perhaps are deſigned to be informed of this wonderful Secret. Nevertheleſs, I thought fit to retain the Subtilty of the Myſtery, though the words ſpeak Engliſh; whereto the conſtant Students may but with labor reach, and that to whet their appetites, not that the lazy Vulgar ſhould pluck with eaſe, leſt they deſpiſe or abuſe. It is no deſparagement to the Subject that it appears in an Engliſh dreſs, no more then it was when habited in Greek, Latin, Arabick, &c. among the ancient Grecians, Romans, and Arabians, for to each of them it was their vulgar Tongue: And had not thoſe Nations, to whom Learning (in her progreſs through the world) came, taken the pains of Tranſlation, and ſo communicated to their own Countries the benefit of ſeveral Faculties; we had yet lived in much ignorance of Divinity, Philoſophy, Phyſick, Hiſtory, and all other Arts; for it was by the help of Tranſlation they all roſe to their ſeveral heights. I preſume to hope you will pardon the want of that Elegancy and

Richneſs,

Richneſs, which will ſtay behinde with Originals, as their proper and peculiar Ornaments and Graces; and accept of that homely Habit a Tranſlation muſt be content to wear: For ſaving the pains whereof to future times, if ſome general Forms and Characters were invented (agreeing as neer to the natural quality, and conception of the Thing they are to ſignifie, as might be;) that (to men of all Languages) ſhould univerſally expreſs, whatſoever we are to deliver by writing; it would be a welcome benefit to Mankinde, and much ſweeten the Curſe of Babels Confuſion, ſave a great expence of Time taken up in Tranſlation, and the Undertakers merit extraordinary encouragement.

Nor will this unity in Character ſeem impoſſible, if we conſider there is in all men one firſt principle of Reaſon, one common interior Intelligence, and that originally there was but one Language. Nay, it will appear leſs difficult, if we look back upon thoſe ſteps already laid to our hands; for we may draw ſome helps from the Egyptian Hieroglyphick Symbols, Muſical Notes, Stenography, Algebra, &c. Beſides, we we ſee there are certain Characters for the Planets, Signes, Aſpects, Metals, Minerals, Weights, &c. all which have the power of Letters, and run currant in the Underſtanding of every Language, and continue as Reliques and Remains of the more Sacred and Secret Learning of the Ancients, whoſe intentions and words, were not expreſſed " by the Compoſition of Syllables or Letters; but by Forms, Figures, and Characters.

To preſent this invention as more feiſable, we may conſider that the uſeful radical words, if numbred, would not ſwell beyond our Memories fathom, ſpecially if well ordered and digeſted by the judicious direction of an able and general Linguiſt; and ſuch a one that rightly underſtands the firſt and true impreſſions, which Nature hath ſtamped upon the things they would have ſignified by the Form. Our miſery now is, we ſpend a great part of our beſt and moſt precious time in learning one Language, to underſtand a little Matter, (and in how many Tongues is it neceſſary to be perfect, before a man can be generally knowing?) whereas, if this invention were but compleated, Arts would arrive at a high perfection in a little ſpace, and we might reckon upon more time, in the ſhort account and meaſure of our days, to be imployed in a ſubſtantial ſtudy of Matter.

But I muſt retire; and confeſs I have extreamly tranſgreſt the limits of a Preface; which (if it bore exact proportion to the Matter enſuing) ſhould be more brief and compendious: And yet I intended to deliver herewith ſome ſhort account of the firſt and true Matter, with the proceſs of the whole Work; but I ſhall leave you to the Collections enſuing, for preſent ſatisfaction, and if encouraged by your acceptance of this, may one day beſtow my own Meditations upon a particular Diſcourſe: In the mean time, I charge all thoſe that ſhall reap any benefit by this Tranſlation, under the ſecret and ſevere Curſe of God, That they beſtow upon it the Auguſt reverence due to ſuch a Secret, by concealing it to themſelves, and making uſe of it onely to the Glory of our Great Creator. That being the principal aym of this Work, and of all others ſtamped with the Signature of

POSTSCRIPT.

A*Fter I had writ this* Preface*; and committed it to the Preſs, I happily met with the following* Arcanum, and perceiving it to ſuit ſo punctually with theſe Chymical Collections, for the ſolidity, likeneſs, and bravery of the Matter and Form, and to confirm ſome of thoſe Directions, Cautions, and Admonitions I had laid down in the Prolegomena*; and withal, finding it a piece of very* Eminent Learning and Regard*; I adventured to tranſlate it likewiſe; and perſwaded the* Printer to joyn them into one Book, which I hope will not diſlike the Reader, nor overcharge the Buyer: And though in the Tranſlation thereof, I have uſed the ſame ſolemnity and reſervation, as in the former; and ſuch as befits ſo venerable and tranſcendent a Secret: Yet I hope, that thoſe who (favored with a propitious Birth) ſearch into the Sacred Remains of Ancient Learning, admire the rare and diſguiſed effects of Nature, and through their Piety and Honeſty, become worthy of it, may finde Ariadnes thred to conduct them through the deluſive windings of this intricate Labyrinth.

TO THE STUDENTS IN Chymiſtry.

Although (according to Ariſtotle) Muſick be ranked in the number of Sciences: yet we read how K. Philip taunt-d his Son Alexander, when he ound him Harmoniouſly ſinging, in theſe words ; Alexander, art not thou aſhamed to ſing ſo finely? By which words he accounts it diſhonorable for a Noble Man to uſe that Art publikely ; but rather when he is at leiſure: Privately, either to refreſh his Spirits, or if there be any diſpute concerning Phyſick, that it ſhould be tempered with all Harmonical ſweetneſs, and proportion. In like manner it is (to our grief be it ſpoken) with the Art of Chymiſtry; whileſt it is ſo much defamed, diſparaged, and brought into diſgrace, by the fraudulent dealing of Impoſtors, as that whoſoeve profeſſes it, ſhall ſtill be ſtigmatize with Publike Reproach.

Nevertheleſs very many, yea too many there are to be foun at this day, (profeſſing I know no what ſhadow of this Divine Art who ingroſs unto themſelves, a it were the whole World, to it

Deſtructio

Deſtruction, [Braſs, Iron, or other Metal,] not to convert the ſame nto Gold, but are found at length o cheat with it for Gold, to the great grief of many : Orphans mourn, by reaſon of ſuch Knaves, Widows weep, Husbands lament, Wives bewail their miſery. This Man deſireth his Lands, that his Houſe, another his Rents taken rom him. And amongſt theſe al- o (which is the more to be won- red at) we have known very many inſtructed in every Acade- mical Science; becauſe of whom being ſtruck no leſs with Admi- ition then Fear,) I begun to be mething diſcouraged, and by e example of their vain Expence, ave over any further ſcrutiny in is Golden Science.

But the remembrance of my fancy in this Study, wherein for ven yeers together I had been an re witneſs of the Truth thereof, I ſpent many laborious days, and tedious nights, until that according to the advice of Count Bernard, I had for ſome yeers read, and more accurately peruſed th moſt ſelect and approved Authors ; the which (although a firſt I ſuppoſed they had differe amongſt themſelves , as if wha this ſayes, another denyes, wha here is raiſed, there is ruined, yet at length I found (by Gods aſſiſtance,) that they agreed Hermetically and Harmonically, in on Way, and one Truth ; by whic means I diſcovered the one for true Philoſophers, the other falſ Chymiſts, and at length, calle to minde the memorable ſayin of Daſtin the Philoſopher : Tha it ſufficeth not to be Learned, unle in the very thing from whence th Queſtion ariſeth. So I found men (otherwiſe Learned) unlearned i this Art ; amongſt which I kne a Biſhop, (whoſe fame in Chymiſtry was celebrated of many, whom I viſited, after I had ſeen a little Chymical Tract, writ with his own hand:) And when I took him laboring in our Common Gold, whence he ſtudied to Extract Vitriol, (which he held his onely Secret) I left him; for that I ſaw he had neither before him the proper Matter, nor the manner of Working, according to the Doctrine of Philoſophers; and that I knew he had many Coal-rakers, and Brokers of Receipts, as well in England, as in Germany, and Bohemia: But truly I found not one Man for Thirty yeers together, that wrought upon the proper Matter, and conſequently not any who deſerved the name of a Philoſopher. And for my own part, if more may not be granted me, then a far off to behold the Holy Land, I ſhall admire whatſoever the Great and Omnipotent God, is pleaſed out of his infinite Mercy, to grant me; yet in the interim, whilſt (for delight ſake) I was converſant (by the favor of Hortulanus) in the Philoſophical Roſary, I pickt out ſome no leſs pleaſant then wholſome Flowers, which I have made up into a Faſciculus, for the Eaſe and Benefit of Young Students, in this Art (whilſt in reading and peruſing, they were wont to conſume ſome yeers, before that they learned rightly how to handle, or in handling to compound:) The which (if not too boldly) I dedicate to you the Lovers of this Truth, and have accounted it worthy of publike view. Deign therefore (ye ingenious Men,) that this my Faſciculus, howſoever collected by my Labor, yet by your Authority and Favor, to be preſented a more

Illuſtrious

Illuſtrious Work: whence (by Gods Favor and Permiſſion) they may be able to pick out what is daily ſo much deſired, and ſought for, by multitudes.

What in obſervance, Faith, and all Duty, and in memory of your Merits, may in any wiſe be performed by me, to your praiſe and honor: the ſame I moſt freely, and dutifully promiſe, and vow ſhall be performed. Farewel moſt Famous Men, and may ye not diſdain to cheriſh me with your Patronage.

TO THE Candid READER.

EVen as Reaſon and Experience; are juſtly called the Hands of Phyſitians; without which, neither Health [the Treaſure of Life] can be preſerved; nor Sickneſs [the Herauld of Death] expelled: And that Phyſick it ſelf remaineth Lame and Defective: So, in this Philoſophical Work, Nature and Art ought ſo lovingly to embrace each other, as “ that Art may not require what Nature denies, nor Nature deny what may be perfected by Art. For Nature aſſenting, ſhe demeans her ſelf obediently to every Artiſt, whileſt by their Induſtry ſhe is helped, not hindred. Of whoſe Steps, Progreſs, Motion, and Condition, whoſoever

is

's ignorant, let him not preſume to attempt this Work, (of it ſelf Abſtruſe, and otherwiſe wonderfully ſhadowed over by Philoſophers, with Infinite Clouds:) For nothing Anſwers his Expectation, who either knows not, or ſtrives to compel Nature. For that ſhe (as learnedly Raymund) will not be enforced, or ſtraitned. But he that covets after Fame, by the Honor of the Art, or to reach the Summity thereof; let him firſt obſerve, and obſequiouſly follow Nature Naturalizing, Propagating, Multiplying, and being the Miſtreſs and Guide, muſt reſemble Art in what ſhe is able: which although in divers things it be a Correctrix, and help of Nature, whilſt it cleanſeth her from all Errors and Defilements, and being hindred in Motion, is holpen by it; yet is it impoſsible ſhe ſhould be imitated in all things.

For, as in this Divine Work (not un-undeſervedly ſo called, inaſmuch a it is affirmed of all Philoſophers, tha never any Man of himſelf, withou Divine Inſpiration, could comprehend, or underſtand it, thoug otherwiſe he appeared a moſt Learne Philoſopher :) So, in all other Compound Bodies, in the firſt Mixture or Compoſition of Elements (that may conceal the Occult cauſe of Motion and Conjunction) the weigh and proportion of every Element are utterly unknown. That Secret o Secrets, beſtowed by God upon Nature in the Beginning, ſhe ſtill retains in her own Power, and ſhall ſo until the end of the World: Perhaps, leſt Mortal Men (if it ha been made known to them) elated b the inſolence and pride of Devil ſhould preſume to Create, which i proper to God onely; who by the unſpeakable Power of his Word, hat endued Nature (as his Miniſter with the Generation, Propagatio an

and Multiplication of all things. For when he inſpired in things Created, the Generation of the World (ſaying, Encreaſe and Multiply;) he gave alſo a certain Springing or Budding, [that is, Greenneſs, or Strength,] whereby all things multiply themſelves (whence ſome more profoundly contemplating, ſaid, That all things were green; whereas to be green, may be ſaid to encreaſe, and grow up together,) and that Greenneſs they called Nature. Therefore it is not without cauſe, that the prime Philoſophers do ſo ſeek after, and ſacriſice to Nature: when without her help, Art (in this knowledg) performs nothing. Nor any wonder, if the moſt Learned Engliſh Monk, [Roger Bacon,] writ of the wonderful Power of Nature, and the marvellous Secrets in Art. Nor doth Parmenides leſs admire the Power of Nature; [in theſe words, O that Heavenly Nature, over-ruling, and excelling the Natures of Truth, and cauſing them to rejoyce. This is that ſpecial and Spiritual Nature, to whom God gave a Power, above the violence of Fire; and therefore let us magnifie it, ſeeing that nothing is more Pretious!]

Therefore (Friendly Reader) I recommend to thee, and the Sons of Art, this Lady of Honor, without which we attain not, (or perfect any thing in) this Art; that ſo it may be your work, and chief ſtudy to obtain her Friendſhip, ſo, as when an occaſion ſerves, ye may be found Judges, not Jugglers of Nature and Art.

For which cauſe I have writ this little Tract; [viz. My Faſciculus Chemicus;] wherein I have given you the more abſtruſe Secrets of Nature, choſen, culled, compacted, and digeſted in no ordinary manner, as being a renowned Speculum, whoſe refulgent, refulgent, and reflecting Beams make known, the unknown Secrets of Nature; taking original from the Chaos, proceeding to the Separation of Light from Darkneſs; and by the Degree of Perfection (Art handling it) the Foot-path is manifeſted, and chalked out; whereby Nature is at laſt brought to more Perfection. Which Book indeed, although perhaps it may be looked upon, by many, as a thing of no value, becauſe it conſiſts (for the moſt part) of the ſayings of Philoſophers, digeſted onely in order, (yet is it no eaſie buſineſs, when as David Lagneus witneſſes of himſelf, in his Epiſtle to his Harmonious Chymiſtry, whilſt he was Counſellor and Phyſitian to the moſt Chriſtian King, That he ſweat with continual Labor, for twenty two yeers, until he had compoſed (it may be) ſuch another little Tract.) As touching the Method of this Work, it contains ten

ſmall

ſmall Chapters, and every Chapter, follows the Order of the Work: whence alſo a Myſtery is revealed, which for matter of diſſembling, or concealing things, was never before ſet forth in this manner: Other men having ever put the Beginning at the End, and the End at the Beginning, in ſuch ſort (as witneſſes Dynyſius) that it was impoſſible (the Divine Counſel ſo diſpoſing it) to finde all things orderly writ. *Some Chapters alſo are noted, not onely with Titles (ſcarce hitherto heard of) but rare Things, [even the Secrets of the Art laid open,] which (as very many affirm) ought not to be publiſhed. But in the end of every Chapter, I have briefly comprized, and expounded the extracted Marrow thereof. CHAP. I.
Naturall Matter, what it is, and from whence.

IN truth the matter of which the Stone is made, is onely one; nor can this neighbouring Faculty bee und in any other thing. And it that which is moſt like to Gold, is alſo that of which it is begotn; and it is Argent Vive, alone, ure, without the commixtion of ny other thing, and it is obſcured ith infinite names, and the manr of operating is onely one, but it is diverſly varied by the Philoſophers, therefore no wonder if the Art be difficult, and the Artiſts greatly erre. Neverthleſſe Art begets Medicine from the ſame, or altogether the like principles, as Nature begets metalls. Petrus Bonus, page 120.

Arnoldus. The Vive Argent is compounded with Citrine Sulphur, ſo that they are changed and become the ſame in one maſſe Lucide Red, weighty, of which two kindes are ſufficient for the compoſition of the Elixir. He therefore that deſires to ſearch into the ſecrets of this Art, it is fit he know the firſt matter of Metalls, leſt he loſe his labour. Arnoldus lib. de Alchimia, pag. 1.

Petrus Bonus. Art willing to follow Nature inquires out her end, and findes theſe principles congealed by Nature into this middle Nature, and not impure; and endevours to digeſt geſt and purifie ſuch a Matter with the heat of Fire, that from thence he might draw the form of Gold, with which all imperfect metals are turned into Gold, in as much as they are ordained by nature to this end, *Petrus Bonus p.*105.

Lullius. We ſay that the whole is but one thing, which is varied into the number of three, by its operations, and in varying by one decoction is one thing of one ſingle power, and after this paſſing by degrees to information, by another digeſtion it will be another thing, which we call Argent Vive, Earth, Water, and Ferment, Gumm and our ſecond Salſature, bitter and ſharp, which by its Compound virtue and propriety got by the ſecond digeſtion; doth looſe the whole body, and after by another digeſtion hath a greater force. And ſo thou maiſt underſtand that in our Magiſteriall there are three proper Earths, three Waters, and three proper Ferments; three proper Gumms, three Salſatures, three Argent Vives Congealing, as in our Practiſe is manifeſt. Lullii Theorica p.109.

Tauladanus. Such a Matter muſt be choſen in which is Argent Vive, pure, clean, clear, white, and red, and not brought to perfection, but equally and proportionably mixt by a due meane, with ſuch a ſulphur, and congealed into a ſolid Maſſe, that by our diſcretion and prudence, and our artificiall Fire, we may attain its inmoſt purity, that after the perfection of the work it may be a Thouſand Thouſand times ſtronger then ſimple bodies digeſted by naturall heat. Tauladanus pag.314.

Lullius. If we had Sulphur and Mercury from that matter upon the Earth of which Gold and Silver are made under the Earth, from them we could eaſily make Gold and Silver ver, with the propriety of their own nature. Therefore there is nothing farther requiſite, but that we finde what is neareſt to it, of its own nature. Mercury in all Elemented ſubſtances is one and the ſame; which Mercury is indeed naturall heat, which produceth as well Vegetables as Minerals, although diverſly according to the command of Nature. And ſo our Mercury never is viſible, but intelligible only, and ſo it is manifeſt, that it is in every thing and every place, hence common to all things. *Lullii Codicillus pag.*131.

Flamelius.

In our Stone, there are the Sun, and the Moon vive, and they can generate other Suns and other Moons; other Gold and Silver, to theſe, are dead. *Flamelii Annotationes, pag.*138.

Roſ.Philoſ.

The Philoſophers Stone is found created by nature and our Mercury, viz. the matter in which the Phi-Philoſophers Mercury is contained, is that whjch nature hath a little wrought and framed in a Metallick form, but yet left imperfect. *Roſ. Philoſ. pag.*231.

Ripleus. I ſaw a red Toad drinking the juyce of Grapes even till his Bowels were burſt. Riplei Somnium.

Vogel. Art following Nature will not uſe Argent vive alone, nor Sulphur alone, nor Argent vive and Sulphur together; but the ſame Matter mixt and compounded of the ſame Principles, which Nature hath prepared for Art, like a carefull Mother for her Daughter. And hath conjoyned them from the beginning of the generation of Metals not otherwiſe, as in Milk, Butter, Cheeſe, and Whay. But afterwards Art ſeparates and ſequeſters it, and again joyns and digeſts it. being purified by the addition of outward heat only: Nature operating from within, untill that outward Sulphur be divided from the Argent vive. *Vogelius pag.*105.

Baſilius Val. Think with thy ſelf whereto thou wouldſt labour to bring our Stone, then ſhalt thou know, it flows from no other then a certain Metallick Radix; from whence alſo Metalls themſelves are ordained by the Creator. Baſilius Valentinus page 15.

Clanger Buc. When I ſpeak of Mercuriall water, doe not underſtand Crude Mercury, but the Philoſophers Mercury of a Red ſubſtance, drawn from Mineralls, having the matter in themſelves, from Sulphur and Mercury, and that Argent vive and Sulphur are one thing, and proceed from one thing, therefore whiten the Leton, viz. Braſſe with Mercury, becauſe Leton is of the Sun and Moon, a compound Citrine imperfect body, which when thou haſt whitened &c. *Clanger Buccinæ pag.*503.470.

Dunſtan. The Philoſophers Gold and Silver, are two principall Tinctures, red and white, buried in one & the ſame body, which Tinctures can never naturally come to their perfect complement, yet they are ſeparable from accidentall droſſe, and earthly lutoſity, and afterwards by their proper qualities in their pure Earths the tinctures red and white are found commixtable, and the moſt fit Ferments for them, ſo that they may in a manner be ſaid to want no other thing. Of this very Body the matter of the Stone, three things are chiefly ſpoken, viz. The green Lion, Aſſa fœtida, and white Fume; but this is inferred by the Philoſophers from the Compound, that they might anſwer the fooliſh according to their own folly, and deceive them by the divers multiplicity of names. But doe thou always underſtand one thing to be really intended, tended, although accidentally three things may be ſo called. For the green Lyon, Aſſa fœtida, and white Fume, are altogether attributed to one and the ſame ſubject, and are always coucht in one and the ſame ſubject, untill by Art made manifeſt. By the green Lyon, all Philoſophers whatſoever underſtood, green Gold, multiplicable, ſpermatick, and not yet perfected by Nature; having power to reduce Bodies into their firſt matter, and to fix volatile and ſpirituall things, and therefore not unfitly called a Lyon. By Aſſa fœtida, we underſtand a certain unſavory Odor, exhaled from the unclean body in the firſt operation, which may in all things be likened to ſtinking Aſſa fœtida. The reaſon why it is called white Fume is this: In the firſt diſtillation, before the Red Tincture aſcends, there ariſes a ſmoak truly white, whereby the re-receiver is darkned or filled with a certain milky ſhadow, whence it receives the name of Virgins milk. Therefore where ever thou findeſt a ſubſtance endowed with theſe three properties, know that it is the matter of the Philoſophers Stone. Dunſtan. pa. 3.

Clangor Buccinæ. Therefore let us take a matter which will be Gold, and which by the mediation of our skill is brought into a true ferment. Clangor. pag. 510.

Roſarius Philoſ. The matter of Metalls is a certain ſmoaky ſubſtance, and it is the firſt matter of Metalls, containing in it ſelf an unctuous or oyly moiſture, from which ſubſtance the Artiſt ſeparates the Philoſophicall humidity, which is fit for the work, which will be as clear as a water drop, in which is coucht the metallick Quinteſſence, and that is placable Metall, and therefore hath in it a meane of Joyning Tinctures togeogether, becauſe it hath the nature of Sulphur, and Argent vive. *Roſar.Phil.p.*278.

The thing whoſe head is Red, Daſtin. eet White, and eyes Black, is the whole Myſtery, *Daſtin. viſio p.*2.

Know that our Leton is Red, Morien. but not for our uſe, untill it bee made White. *Morienus p.*38.

When thou wouldſt have Mine- Lullius. rall Elements, take not of the firſt, nor laſt, becauſe the firſt are too much ſimple, but the laſt, too groſſe. When thou art hungry, take Bread, not Meal; when thou wouldſt make Bread, take Meal, not the Ear. *Lullius Theori.p.*34.

There is a pure Matter, which Eximedes. is the Matter of Gold, containing in it ſelf, the heat which gives increaſe, and hath a power to increaſe and multiply in its kinde, as all other things. *Eximedes, p.*45.

In our imperfect Metall, are the Arnold. Sun and Moon, in virtue and neer powpower, becauſe if they were not in the Compound, neither the Sun nor Moon could thence be made. *Arnold. Epiſt.pag.*491.

Lullius. Mercury is in all Elemented Subſtances, one and the ſame; which Mercury is indeed the naturall heat which produces as well Minerals as Vegetables, although diverſly according to the precept of Nature; and ſo our Mercury is not viſible but intelligible; and it is manifeſt, that it is in every thing and place, and common to all. *Lullii Codic.fol.*134. *Repelat.*6.

THE COROLLARY.

Vogelius, Treveſanus, with divers other Philoſophers adviſe, firſt ſeriouſly to conſider in what point Authors moſt agree; for in it they affirm, the onely and ſingle truth is involved: To me therefore, meditating this from the moſt ſelect Authors.

hors, recited with their Harmony, both in the Subſtance, Form, and Colour, and in all neceſſary Circumſtances and Accidents, was diſcovered (by Divine aſsiſtance) the Subject of all wonder (as Cornelius Agrippa rightly cals it) in open and naked words. It is therefore generally agreed, and of all confeſſed, That there is one vive or volatile Argent, retaining a certain Vegetability, while it is yet in motion, not brought to maturity, or the determinate term of naturall digeſtion in the Mines. And the ſame is immaturate Argent vive (not that Mature of the vulgar) which is next to Metall in poſsibility; and therefore of ſome is called Immature Metall. According to Arnold, Riplie, Dunſtan, Morien, and Clangor Buccinæ; it is cloathed with a Red colour, offered or brought to us by Nature; but if it be not by the Artiſt taken from its Radix in a due time,

viz. before it come to ſuch maturity, as to contain one grain of Malleable Metall, it will be unfit for our purpoſe. Seek therefore the Philoſophick Embryon in its due place, and mature immaturity, and you ſhall know (as Roſarius ſaith) our Stone is found created of Nature; which truly is to be underſtood of the matter of the Stone compounded by Nature, and formed into a Metallick form, but given to Art imperfect, that by degrees it might be brought beyond the degree of perfection.

CHAP. II.

The Preparation: or the firſt work, or work of the Winter.

Senior. THis is the Preparation, becauſe there are blinde men, and they have erred a long time, while they were ignorant that this Stone was pre-prepared with this preparation. Senior, p.31.

Daſtin. If the firſt work proceed not, how is the ſecond attained to? Because, if no diviſion be made, here is no conjunction. Daſtini Speculum, pag.56.

Arnold. We muſt begin with the ſepa-ation of the Elements, from the Red earth, as of the pure from the mpure. Arnoldus in Hortulanum, ag.9.

Pandolph. Thou muſt diligently conſider, how this diſſolution may be made, nd certainly know, that it is not lone, but by the water of Mercu-y; and know, that every body is diſſolved with the ſpirit, with which it is mixt, and without doubt is made ſpirituall. Pandol-hus in Turba, pag.16.

Lullius. Son of Truth, underſtand, that we in the firſt operation of our work, doe purge and prepare mat-er for the creation of its Sulphur; which which being prepared, by and by in the ſecond preparation, wee compound and create medicine, which how great virtue it hath, will be manifeſt. Therefore firſt thou muſt create its Sulphur, becauſe without that, thou canſt not make the compleat Elixir. And when thou haſt created Sulphur, then begin the Philoſophick work: but ever conſider, that the nature and propriety which is in the very ſpirit, may not be combuſt in its preparation by the power of th fire. Becauſe then the ſpirit canno whiten, nor joyn it ſelf with th Earth: Therefore it often happens that they who think to make wate of life, make water of death, b reaſon of combuſtion. Lullii Apertorium, p.2.

Arnoldus. The Veſſels ſo diſpoſed, a moſ ſubtill ſmoke will ariſe in the Alembick, and the ſame will be turned into a clear water, having th nature of theſe ſpecies; whereof the Stone is generated: which Water deſcends by the Noſe of the Alembick. Arnoldus in Comment. Hortulani. p.16.

The Phlegm wherein our Sulphur, which is called Gold, is decocted, is that in which Air is included: for our Phlegm is a middle ſubſtance; and the firſt water of Mercury, wherein the principle of the Stone is; viz. its diſſolution; nor doth it enter with it, but as it were wetting the parts of things, not generating or increaſing. Lullii Teſtam. pag. 1. Lullius.

It is meet thou prepare the Matter, till it be fit to receive our Mercury, which we call glorious Mercury; and the manner is, That thou take a proportion of the ſaid Earth, and put upon it the fourth part of the ſaid imperfect Menſtruum, wherein is ſuch a Mercury, and ſet it in a Balneo for the ſpace of ſix Lullius.

days, and diſtill it, and ſo continue untill the Earth be diſpoſed to imbrace a Soul; which will not be done at the firſt or ſecond time; therefore put it again and again in the Balneo for the ſpace of ſix days, in a Glaſſe very well ſealed; after that open the veſſell, and ſetting the Alembick on again, with a moſt gentle fire diſtill the humidity; and again pour on more of its Menſtruum, which hath its ſeed in it, and digeſt it as aforeſaid and ſo continue untill the Earth b diſpoſed to entertain its ſoul. Son it is to be obſerved, when it ſhal drink up and retain four parts mor of its weight, that if thou put a little upon a heated plate of Gold o Silver, it will all flie up into ſmoke then is the Earth pregnant and prepared, which ought to be ſubl med. Lul. Teſt. pag. 15.

Philoſ.* g.345.

Our Mercury is made of perfect odies, and not imperfect, that is, ith the ſecond Water, after they ave been duly calcin'd by the rſt. Scala, pag.128. Scala.

It behoveth thee to extract one ving or vive incombuſtible War, and then congeal it with the erfect body of the Sun, which een there is diſſolved into nature, d a white congealed ſubſtance, as it were Cream, and would come l white. Neverthleſſe, firſt this Artepheus.

Sun in his putrefaction and reſolution in this Water in the beginning loſes his light; is obſcured and waxeth black; at length he will elevate himſelf above the Water,& by little and little, a white colour will ſwim above him, and ſo the perfect body of the Sun receives life, and in ſuch a Water is inlivened, inſpired, increaſed and multiplied in his ſpecie, as other things Therefore our Water is a Fountain fair, pleaſant and clear, prepared onely for the King and Queen whom it very well knows,and the it, for it attracts them to it ſelf, an they remain two or three days t waſh themſelves in that Fountain viz. ſome moneths; and theſe i makes to grow young,and render them very beautifull.

Theſe three things mutuall follow, viz. Humidity, Putridit and Blackneſſe; from whence th glaſſie houſe may be poſited, an ſubti ubtilly ſited, untill the moiſt Mat- er included, by little and little ecame putrid and black, for the utrefaction begins together with he ſolution, but the putrefaction s not yet compleat, untill the hole Matter be diſſolved into vater. Artephus pag.9.

Daſtin. One of the contraries exceeding eſtroies the reſt, whence the Earth is made Water, when the vatry qualities overcome it, and n the contrary, this Water muſt raw forth three things, viz. a Spirit, a Body, and a Soule, whence his Water is threefold in Na- ure, which hath in it ſelf Water, ire, and Earth. We divide the iſſolved Stone in the Elements, nd waſh it particularly, that it t might be more ſubtilized, and he better purified, and that at leaſure the Complexion might e more firmly compoſed, but we iſtill it very often, as the Water and Air are clean without dregs and light without filth, pure with out contraries, for then they waſ more eaſily, touch more plentifu ly, and work more nobly. For A (as Ariſtotle ſaith) in like mann throws off all ſuperfluities from i work, as Nature doth. For Fi extracts that which exiſts in t interiours of things, and feeds o the ſulphurity of them, ſubtilizin and rarifying at pleaſure. An therefore we diſtill them, th we might ſweetly draw out the filth. But we doe it ſweetly a with inhumation, leſt the exceſſi Fire conſume the ſought for ſu tilties. Whence in every diſtillat on obſerve this ſign, that unive ſally there be candour and puri in it, and whatſoever drops for unmixt, put apart, becauſe t work is corrupt if thou doe othe wiſe. Therefore we ſo much diſti it, untill it ſend forth no dregge

unleſſe happily white ones,and this we iterate ſeven times, that in their ſimple purity they might tranſcend the orders of the ſeven Planets. For it is meet they be moſt pure and clean, which by their purity ſhould cleanſe and perfect other things. And according to the quantity of diſtillation they will be clear, and according to the plurality of clearneſs,they will cleanſe and touch other things. Whence it ought to be diſtilled ſeven times; what is more is evil, becauſe as diminution hinders,ſo augmentation corrupts.

In the fourth diſtillation follows the Lavement, that its every Element might be rectified ſeverally, whence we diſtill the Water and Aire ſeven times by themſelves. But thou ſhalt diſtill all things with moiſture, becauſe drineſſe corrupts the work with combuſtion: And the Philoſophers adviſe that every diſtillation be always made ſeven days with inhumation, meaning that inhumation be made ſeven days between every diſtillation. Daſtini ſpec. pag.96.

Roſar. Arnold. It behoveth thee to exerciſe the ſeparation of the Elements as much as thou art able, to waſh off the Water and Air by diſtillations, and to burn up the Earth by Calcination, untill there remain not any thing of the Soul in the Body, unleſſe what may not be perceived in the operation, the ſign of which will be, when nothing ſhall be evaporated from the Body, if a little of it be put upon a heated plate. Roſar. Arnold. pag.423.

Maſſa Solis & Lunæ. As an Infant exhauſts all airy vapours in nine moneths, and the menſtruum turned into a milky form: ſo in nine moneths the firſt work is performed, viz. the ſecond whiteneſſe, becauſe the whole is coagulated: Neverthele ſſe the

vork is finiſhed about ſix moneths ccording to the Experience of the Author, but according to Balgus in Turba in an hundred and ninety lays. Maſſa Solis & Lunæ. pag. 75.

Let not the water be ſuffered to tand when it is fit for operation, ecauſe it receives its Curd into he bottome, crudled or coagulated by the cold of the Aire, and ongealing drieth; which hapned o one of my Companions, who or the ſpace of a year found it ſo, ut it was not diſtilled. *Maſſa Sois & Lunæ. pag.*274.

Roſar. Philoſoph.

No ſolution ought to be made vithout Blood, proper or approriate, viz. the Water of Mercuy, which is called the Water of he Dragon, and that Water ought o be made by an Alembick withut the addition of any other hing. *Roſar. Philoſ. p.*223.

Raymundus Lullius.

The whole courſe of the work endures

Lul. Theo p.*76.

Ventura. Accommodate well the Fire i the furnace, and ſee that the whol Matter be diſſolved into Wate then rule it with a gentle Fire, un till the greater part be turned int black duſt. Becauſe when ou Stone is in our veſſell, and ou Matter feels our Sun, it will pre ſently be reſolved into Water. *Ventura p.*129.

Roſarius Philoſ. Putrefaction is made with moſt gentle Fire, ſo that nothin may aſcend, becauſe if any thin ſhould aſcend, there would b made a ſeparation of parts, whic ough ought not to be, untill the Maſcuine and Feminine are perfectly oyned. *Roſar. Philoſ.pag.*261.

Daſtin. The encompaſſing frigidity of the Aire, the binding ſolidity of the Earth, the diſſolving heat of the Fire, the impetuoſity and reſtleſſe motion of the Water, and exceeding quantity of Multitude doe hinder Putrefaction (as Ariſtotle ſaith.)

But the calidity of the Air, the ſubtility of Matter, the gentleneſſe of the Fire, the ſtability of Reſt, the equality of Compounds, the gravity of Patience, the maturity of Time, do neceſſarily induce and haſten Putrefaction; yet ſo, that the Air be tempered, what is thick ſubtilized, the Fire moderated, Reſt preſerved, Proportion adequated, Patience ſtrengthened, and the time expected untill Nature proceeding naturally ſhall have compleated her owne worke.

Daſtin ſpec. pag. 184.

Scala. Our Water muſt be divided into two parts, whereof in one part the Body is congealed, viz. with ſeven Imbibitions and Congelations, but in the other part it putrefies and melts, that the fiery Water aboveſaid might be caſt forth. Scala Philoſ. pa. 151.

If the work in its managing be deduced to the finall red ſtate, by corruption before the due term o whiteneſſe (which it may not be) thou haſt erred; then for a remedy take away the redneſſe with freſh white Water, by imbibition and inhumation. Idem.

Lullius. There are three Humidities, th firſt is Water, the ſecond is Aire (the mean between Water and Oil the third is Oil it ſelf. The Wate is diſtilled to the likeneſſe or ſig of perfect whiteneſſe, which i tranſparent ſplendour, and th ſhining clearneſſe of cryſtall; an Lullius.

In our whole Magiſteriall there are three principall Spirits neceſſary, which without the conſummation of their reſolution cannot be manifeſted, and they are otherwiſe called three Argent vives, and for Argent vive underſtand the Water in which the Tincture is carried. *Raymund.Theor.p.*122.24.

Ripleus.

If you will hear me, I will truly ſhew what is that Mercury chiefly profitable: know therefore that there are three Mercuries which are the Keys of Science whom Raymund cals his Menſtrua, without which nothing is done rightly, but two of thoſe Mercuries are ſuperficiall, the third Eſſentiall, of the Sun and Moon, perfect Bodies when when we firſt Calcine them naturally, but no unclean Body is ingredienced except one, which is commonly called of the Philoſophers, The green Lion, which is the mean of joyning Tinctures. With the ſecond Mercury, which is vegetable Humidity, both the Principall, Materiall, and Formall bodies ought to be reſolved, otherwiſe they are of little moment. And with the third, which is Humidity, very permanent and incombuſtible, the unctuous Tree of Hermes is burnt into Aſhes. *Ripley pa.*25.

Incertus. Sons of Wiſdome, there are three ſolutions, the firſt is of a crude Body, the ſecond is of a Philoſophicall Earth, the third we put in Augmentation. The Virgin is Mercury, becauſe it never propagated a body in the Womb of the Earth, and yet it generates the Stone for us, by reſolving the Heaven.

en,that is, it opens the Gold,and ringeth forth a Soul. Incertus de hemia. pa.6.

Keep the rectified Water apart, becauſe that is the Mercury of the Philoſophers, the water of Life waſhing the Leton. Ariſtotle pag. 366.

The

Lull. compendium. The whole labour and tediouſneſſe is in this, viz. the ſeparation of the Elements and Sulphur. Air cannot be divided from Metals unleſſe by the twentieth, twenty ſecond, or thirtieth diſtillation. And the Fire may be divided from the Earth at the eleventh diſtillation, and as many diſtillations as there are, ſo many putrefactions and reiterations of Water and Air together, to wit, of our Menſtrual water, and every putrefaction requireth eight days, or ſix continued, ſo that the diviſion of the Elements, dures the ſpace of an year but we have compleated it in ſeven moneths. Lull. compend. pa. 281.

The Alchymiſts have ſaid that the Stone is compounded of two Waters, viz. of one which makes the volatile Stone, and the other which fixes and hardens it. Idem.

Avicenna. Between every Calcination of the Earth, pour on water moderately rately, to wit; not much nor little; becauſe if much, there's made a ſea of perturbation, if little, it will be burnt up into aſhes. But ſweetly, not haſtily, from eight days to eight days, by watering, decocting, and calcining the Earth, till it hath imbibed its Water; therefore when the Earth ſhall not be white, bray it together with its Water, iterate and calcine it, becauſe Aroc and Fire doe waſh the Earth, and take away its obſcurity from it; for its preparation is always with Water, and as the fitneſſe of the Water ſhall be, ſo alſo ſhall be the clearneſſe of the Earth, and by how much the more the Earth ſhall be white, &c. Avicenna pag. 420, 421.

He which knows not how to extract Scala. more things out of one, is ignorant alſo to compound one thing of more. Our ſeparation is a ſeparation of a watry or moiſt vapour or phlegme in Balneis, a levigation of rarity, a production of principles. *Scala.p.*134.

Geber. Imbibe Calx or Body oftentimes, that thence it may be ſublimed, and yet more purified then before, becauſe the Calx aſcends upwards very difficultly or not at all, unleſſe holpen by the Spirit. Geber. lib. ſummæ perfectionis pag. 573.

Ventura. ‘ The Veſſell being fitly placed in the Furnace, the Fire underneath muſt be continued, then the Vapour of the Matter will aſcend upwards into the Alembick moſt ſubtilly, and the ſame will be turned into ſerene bright and cleare Water, having the form of a water drop, and the Nature of all the ſpecies of which it is generated, and it deſcends again by the Crows beak, that is, the Neck of the veſſell of the Alembick; and this Water, becauſe it is ſubtile, doth doth enter the Body, and extract firſt the Soule, afterwards it diſſolves all that is left, and turns it into Water. Moreover know that all things which are ſublimed are ſublimed two ways, ſome by themſelves, and ſome with others; but our Mercury ſince it is a Spirit, is ſublimed by it ſelf, but our Earth, ſince it is the Calx of the Body, is not ſublimed, unleſſe very well incorporated with Mercury. Therefore beat or pound them together, and imbibe till they become one Body, becauſe the Body aſcends not unleſſe incorporated with Mercury. *Ventura p.*141.

Diſſolve the Gold and Silver in Water of their kinde if thou know it. *Vogelius p.*78. Vogel.

And this is the laſt Preparation, viz. of Spirits often reiterated by Contrition and Aſſation with their Body, untill thou ſee theſe things which thou deſireſt in it. Maſſa Maſſa Solis & Lunæ.

Solis & Lunæ pag. 240.

Afflictes. Sons of Learning, know ye that the whole Work,and·the Government thereof is not done but by Water, with which mingle ye th body of the Magneſia, and put i in its Veſſel, and cloſe the mout carefully, and boil it with a gentl fire, till it be made liquid, for by the heat of the Water, the whol will eaſily be made Water. *Afflictes in Turba.p.*32.

THE COROLLARY.

From a certain Minerall Maſſ coagulated, lucid, red, ponderou being perfect Metall, in the neare power, containing in it ſelfe vi ſpermatick Sulphur, and vive in mature Mercury, multiplicable in ſelf, with the moſt gentle fire of Balneum, or Bath, is drawn forth certain inſipid, phlegmatick W ter, which if it be again repour n, with its due proportion of Earth, nd in due ſeaſon digeſted, and abracted by diſſolving daily by little nd little (but yet more and more) he Body, it diſſolves likewiſe the ther Elements, and by including ire in it ſelf, carries it up by diilling through an Alembick, the Vater and Aire ought again to be ſo ten poured on, digeſted and abſtraed till the Body be altogether relved by repeated diſtillations and humations. Then after the fourth ſtillation, the Aire is to be ſeparad from the Water, and to be rectied by it ſelf ſeven times, with which terwards abſtract the Fire from e black Earth. Laſtly, ſeparate the ire from the Aire. And at length pregnate the dry Earth (deived of its humidity by imbibing) often with Aire, untill light iſe from darkneſſe, and our Infant pear before our eies, expected by ore then many lucubrations, which at length is crowned with a Diadem, King of Kings,whoſe riſe the Philoſophers adore, under the Ænigma o the riſing Sun in the encreaſing Moon. But in the very point of Coagulation, which is performed b Infrigidation , all Philoſopher with one conſent affirm that th work of the Winter, and of hidde Preparation, is finiſht, then begin the ſecond work truly Philoſophical as in theſe words our Countreyma Norton the excellent Philoſophe hath expreſt : Our Philoſophica work (ſaith he) takes not its beginning before all be clean within an without. And according to Att man , The ſecond work is n made but from a clean and purif ed body. And this Preparation, firſt work he calleth a Sordid labou and adjudges it not worthy a learn man, therefore not unfitly ſaid to the work of Women. But he d ſerves not Sweets, that will n

But he that doth not clearly underſtand, from theſe, the manner of Practiſe, let him ſeek further aſſiſtance from* Raymund Lullie, Ripley, Roſary, whence it plentifully may be fetched, eſpecially whilſt out of their Writings, in this little Chapter, where, here and there, they have obſcurely delivered themſelves, the Path it ſelf is evidently cleared.

CHAP. III.

The Weight in Preparation.

IF thou knoweſt not the quantity of the very Weight, thou wilt altogether want the doctrine of this Science. Forget not there- Daſtin.

fore, that whatſoever ought to diſſolve, ought to exceed in the quantity the thing to be diſſolved. But the firſt part of the Water (according to Philoſophers) ought to diſſolve the Earth, and turn it to its ſelf. Whence they ſay the Water is to be divided, that with the firſt part in forty days, it ought to be diſſolved, putrefied, and coagulated, till it be turned into a Stone, therefore it is meet that Water ſhould exceed the Earth. *Daſt.ſpec.p.*208.

When thou diſſolveſt, it ſhall be fit the Spirit exceed the Body, and when thou fixeſt, the Body ought to exceed the Spirit; for therefore is the Spirit that it might diſſolve the Body, and therefore is the Body that it might fix the Spirit. Therefore thou muſt impoſe three thirds of Moiſt, and one of Dry; for in the beginning of thy operation, help the work in Diſſolution, by the Moon, and in Coagulation by the Sun. Idem pag.96,98.

Maſſa Sol' & Luna.

There is another Weight ſingu-ar or plurall, and it is twofold; the firſt is of the firſt operation, and that is in the Compoſition of the Air, and it is divers accor-ding to divers men. Now there s another Weight Spirituall, of the ſecond work, and that is alſo divers according to divers men. Maſſa Solis & Lunæ p.177.

Daſtin.

I ſay that the firſt Water is to be divided into three thirds, whereof the firſt is to impregnate, termi-nate, and whiten the Earth, but the two other thirds are reſerved to rubifie the white Earth, that is to be incerated, and laſtly to be whitened: But yet no third (as Democritus upon the Magneſia ſaith) is ingredienced all at once, but every of the thirds is divided into another third, that ſo the Nine thirds returning to on Earth, might compleat a perfec Decinary. But the three firſ thirds, are the three firſt Salſatures to perform the firſt Dealbation, but the ſix other remaining thirds are ſix parts of Divine Water to conſume the ſecond Dealbation. But none of thoſe thirds doth altogether ingredience th whole, and at once, but every part of them one after another is ſeverally impoſed in their own ſeaſon, work and order. Daſtin. ſpec. pa. 177.

A ſmall Error in the principles doth cauſe great Error in things principiated; therefore that thou maiſt not erre in the firſt and ſecond work, we have taught always to impoſe Equals, for ſo equality ſhall flouriſh in both, that the Earth might ceaſe, as the Water moiſtens; as the Earth ceaſes. *Idem p.*222.

It

It is fit to attend what belongs o Proportion, for in this many re deceived, therefore that thou naiſt not ſpoil the work, let thy Bodies be both ſubtilly limated vith Mercury, and ſubtilized with qualI proportion, one of the Sun, nother of the Moon, till all theſe hings be reduced into Duſt, then nake thy Mercury, of which join our parts to the Sun, two to the Moon, as it is meet, and in this nanner it behoveth thee thou begin thy work in the figure of the Trinity. Three parts of the Body and as many of the Spirit, and for the Unity of the Spirit, one part more of Spirit then of corporeall Subſtance. According to Raymunds Repertory, this is the true proportion. This very thing my Doctor ſhewed me, but R. Bachon took three parts of the Spirit for one of the Body, for which I have watcht many nights before I perceived ceived it, both is the right, take which thou wilt. If alſo thy Water be equall in proportion with the Earth and meaſured Heat, there will at once come forth a new Budde both White and Red. *Ripley pa.*30.

Mundus. Take of the whiteſt Gumme one part, and of the Urine of a white Calf another part, and part of a Fiſhes Gall, and of the Body of Gumme one part, without which it cannot be corrected; and decoct it forty days, afterwards dry it in the warm Sun till it be congealed. *Mundus pa.*88.

Ariſtotle. Take thy deareſt Son and joyn him equally to his white Siſter, drink to them a Love-cup, becauſe the conſent of goodwill joins one thing to another. Pour on them ſweet Wine, till they be inebriated, and divided into ſmalleſt parts. But remember that all clean things agree moſt aptly with clean lean things, otherwiſe they will enerate Sons unlike themſelves. riſt. in Tractatulo pag.362.

Thou muſt impoſe three thirds f moiſture, and one of dry; for n the beginning of thy operation elp the work in the Solution by he Moon, and the Congelation by he Sun. Daſtin ſpec. pa.98.

THE COROLLARY.

Count Bernard Treviſane vowd to God, that he would never in aked words, or vulgar ſpeech diſloſe the Weight, Matter, or Fires, ut onely in true Parables, without either diminution or ſuperfluity, in mitation of the Wiſe men, as in this out a Vail. For they always deliv things that be like, and conceal t truth, that they might deſer both to be ſaid, and be Philoſ phers.

But ſince in Number, Weight, an Meaſure, all elementated Bodies Animals, Vegetables, and Minera are naturally united, bound, conc tenated and compounded, and by t Harmony of theſe all principiat Principles attain the perfection dained by God, and compleated his handmaid Nature: Not unfi may this Trinity, viz. of Numb Weight, and Meaſure, be called t Golden chain, by which as in all nimals to every Member is grant their ſpeciall Form, ſo by this Cha every Member is joined, united, a performs his Office.

Likewiſe alſo in Vegetables (ſi Nature operates after one and t ſame manner) we may preſume every Vegetable, its own pro weig weight may be particularly obſerved, alſo the prefixt number of Flowers, Leaves, and alſo a due meaſure of Longitude, Latitude, and Profunditude. Even as Minerals and Metals are alſo perfected in a fit proportion of the Weight of Elements pure or impure, in a due meaſure of Time, and certain Numbers: By which bounds rightly diſpoſed all things flouriſh, but being inordinate and confuſed, there is made a Chaos, Imperfection, and a Diſſolution of the Compound. For in their Concatenation and Connexion, is rebuilt an admirable power of Art and Nature, neither can Nature her ſelf conſiſt without theſe, nor Art perform any thing. Not enviouſly therefore did the Philoſophers wonderfully conceale the Proportion of the Elements, and the mixture of them in their operation, as if this being known they had unvailed all things. But as much as belongs to our pur- poſe, viz. the weight of the Philoſophick Work, theſe things onely are principally obſerved, to wit, Equals, two to one, three to one, nine to one; which when and how they are to be diſtinguiſht, our Daſtin (a famous Philoſopher) hath in theſe words clearly opened: When thou diſſolveſt, the Spirit ought to exceed the Body, and when thou doſt fix, the Body to exceed the Spirit. Who therefore knows the due time of Putrefaction to ſolution, the time of Imbibition, Deſiccation, Fermentation, and Inceration, ſhall with eaſie pains and ſmall endevour from the forenumbred Proportions, make choice of what is convenient for every time or ſeaſon of the Work. And he that hath known the Weight, (as Petrus Bonus ſaith) hath known the whole Myſtery, and he that is ignorant of it, let him leave digging in our Books.

CHAP. IV.

The Philoſophers Fire, what?

TAke Water Proportionated in quality according to the Body which thou wouldſt diſſolve, in ſuch a manner, as the unnaturall may not exceed the naturall heat; for every complexionated thing is deſtroyed, unleſſe he Fire of Nature govern it. There are three Humidities, the irſt is Water, the chief of reſolable things; the ſecond is Air, nd it is the mean between Water nd Oil; the third is Oil it ſelf, the erative of all Elements, and our nall Secret. Lull. practica fol. 75. Lullius.

Our Fire is Minerall, and vaours not, unleſſe it be too much irred up, whoſe proportion muſt e known, that it may only ſtir up e Matter, and in a ſhort time, Pontanus.

Dardarius. Argent vive is a Fire, burning, mortifying, and breaking Bodies, more then Fire. Dardarius in Turba 113.

Vogel. I ſay with Lullius that this Water, or Vive Argent is called Fire of the Philoſophers, not becauſe inwardly it is of its own Nature, hotter then Oil, or the forementioned radicall moiſture; but becauſe in its actions it is more powerfull then Elementary Fire, diſſolving Gold without violence, whic Fire cannot doe. *Vogel.pa.*145.

Philoſophers have four different Fires, viz. Naturall, Unnaturall, againſt Nature, and Artificiall, whoſe divers operations the Artiſts ought to conſider. *Ripleus pa.*38.

The Fires meeting themſelves, devour one another. *Roſin. pa.*265.

Scala.

The Spirit is a ſecond Water of which all the things forementioned are nouriſhed, every plant refreſht and quickned, every light kindled, and it makes and cauſes all Fruit. The firſt Water being the Sun is Philoſophically calcined, that the Body might be opened, and made ſpongious, that the

the ſecond Water might the better enter, to operate its work, which ſecond Water is the fire againſt Nature by whoſe power the complement of this Magiſtery is performed. *Scala pa.*125.

Ripleus. We calcine perfect Bodies with the firſt Fire naturally, but no unclean Body doth ingredience our work except one, which of the Philoſophers is called the Green Lion, which is the medium of uniting and joining Tinctures. *Ripl. pa.*26.

There is a certain Soul exiſting between Heaven and Earth, ariſing from the Earth, as Aire with pure Water, the cauſe of the life of all living things, continually running down upon our fourfold Nature producing her with all its power to a better condition, which airy Soul is the ſecret Fire of our Philoſophy, otherwiſe called our Oil, and myſtically our Water. Idem pa. eadem.

Our

Our Mercury is made of perfect Bodies, not imperfect, that is, with the ſecond Water, after the Bodies have been duly Calcined by the firſt. *Albert. pa.*19. Albert.

This Fire is called Humour, becauſe in it, as hath been ſaid, heat or the fire of Nature is hidden, even as the heat of Animals, in the Primogenian moiſture. Vogel.

Water ſince it is Heterogeneall o its Earth; if ſenſible of the leaſt heat, will evaporate, it being left and forſaken.

The Soul is no other then Oil, Oil then Water. *Vogel.p.*134.

If any know to make choice of ſuch Matter as Nature delights, nd to incloſe it rightly prepared n his Veſſel and Furnace; He and (ſaith Nature) will forthwith doe he Work: ſo he provide the re-uiſite Fire, Naturall, againſt Na-ure, not Naturall, and without rdour. *Flamel.pa.*123. Flamelius.

Lullius. We therefore call it Innaturall or not Naturall, becauſe it is not naturated of it ſelf, nor takes away any thing from naturated Nature, nay it rather helps her, by the Mediation of a moderate Exerciſe, according to what Nature requires in her Reformations. *Lullius Codic. pa.*24.

Artepheus. Our Fire is Minerall, is equall, is continuall, it vapours not unleſſe it be too much ſtirred up, it participates of Sulphur, it is taken elſewhere then of Matter, it deſtroys, diſſolves, congeals, and calcines all things, and it is Artificiall to finde out, a compendium, and without coſt, or at leaſt very little; it is alſo moiſt, vaporous, digeſting, altering, penetrating, ſubtill, airy, not violent, not fuming, encompaſſing, containing, onely one, and it is the fountain of Life, or which incircles the Water of Life, and it contains the

The third is that Naturall Fire of our Water, which is alſo called againſt Nature, becauſe it is Water, and neverthleſſe of Gold it makes meer Spirit, which thing common Fire cannot doe: this is Minerall, Equall, & participates of Sulphur, it deſtroys, congeals, diſſolves, and calcines all things, this s penetrating, ſubtile, not burning, and it is the fountain of living Water, in which the King and Queen waſh themſelves, which we ſtand

CHAP. V.

The Riſe or Birth of the Stone.

Lullius.

THE birth of the Earth is made by the way of invented Subimation: That the Earth hath conceived and drunk of the Waer of Mercury as much as ſuffices, you may diſcern and know it by ts volatility, & privation of feces and dregges from the moſt pure ſubſtance, while it aſcends after he manner of moſt pure and moſt white duſt, or of the leaves of the Moon, or of ſplendid Talk. But when thou ſeeſt the Nature of the moſt pure Earth elevated upwards, and as a dead thing even dhere to the ſides of the ſubliming Veſſell, then reiterate the ſublimaion upon her, without the dregs remaining below, becauſe that part xt with the dregs adheres, and then no man, by any mean or induſtry, can ſeparate it from them. *Lull.Codic.pa.*193.

Lullius. Son, you may know that this is the generall head to all Sublimation of Mercuries. Then take the pregnant Earth, and put it into a Sublimatory veſſell luted and well ſhut up, place it in Fire of the third degree for the ſpace of twenty four hours,and ſublime the pure from the impure, and ſo ſhalt thou have the Vegetable Mercury ſublimated, clear, reſplendent, in admirable Salt, which we properly call Vegetable Sulphur, Sal almoniack, our Sulphur, the Sulphur of Nature, and many other names we impoſe on it. *Lull. Teſt.p.*4.

Semita Semitæ. The Water approaching, tha is Argent vive in the Earth, en creaſeth, and is augmented be cauſe the Earth is whitened, an then it is called impregnation,the the Ferment is coagulated, viz. i joine oined with the imperfect Body. repare it, as hath been ſaid, till it ecome one in colour and aſpect, nd then it is called the Birth, be- auſe then is born our Stone, which f the Philoſophers is called a ing. Semita Semitæ. p.441.

Son, it is a ſign when it hath im- Lullius. ibed, and retained four parts ore of its Weight, that if thou ut a little on a heated plate of old or Silver, it will all as it ere fly away into ſmoke, which if doe not ſo, reiterate it untill ſuch Sign appear. Lull. Teſt. pa. 16.

But to know this day of the Petrus riſis, and the Birth or Riſe of Bonus. e Stone, which is the term of e whole conſummation of the ork; it is meet to foreknow the dicating day, ſince it is the very gn it ſelf, and things indicated e as it were things ſignified, for ere is the perfection, or annihi- tion of the Work, becauſe in that very day,nay hour,the ſimple Elements ariſe,purified from all filths.

which preſently ſtand in need o Compoſition, before they fl from the Fire, and are turned int Earth, that is in their fixation, an not ſooner nor later. Petrus Bonu *pa.*127.

Geber. And when thou ſhalt ſee tha thing excelling in its whiteneſ the whiteſt ſnow, and as it wer dead, adhere to the ſides of th ſubliming veſſell, then reiterate it Sublimation without dregs. Ge

Ventura. When this Mercury ariſes, th
Sun and Moon ariſeth togeth with it in its Belly. *Vent.pa.*170.

Scala. The Heaven is to be reiterate ſo often upon the Earth till t Earth become Heavenly and Sp rituall, and the Heaven be ma earthly, and be joined with t Earth. *Scala.pa.*121.

Vogel. Reſtore the vive Argent to t Ear

arth and decoct it, and as be-ore ſublime, and that reiterate ine or twelve times, always aug-nenting the Fire in the end, untill e Earth with often ſublimation nd force of the Calcining Fire ecome White and more Spiritull, part of it being made more ubtill, begin ſomething to aſcend om the bottome of the Veſſell; nd to adhere to its ſides. But this urging of the Earth, which is erformed by Sublimation, is alogether neceſſary before the Phy-icall Work begin. *Vogel.pa.*228.

The Argent vive exuberated, Clangor. Bucc.
hat is the Body of the Earth, paſing together with the menſtruous Matter through the Alembick, and he Sulphur of Nature, is the Spiit of Metals, ſublimated and turned into foliated Earth, which is he firſt and neereſt matter of Meals. *Clang. Bucc.p.*480.

Therefore burn it with dry Fire, Ariſtotle.

that it may bring forth a Son, and keep him warily leſt he fly away into ſmoke: and this is that which the Philoſopher ſaith in his Turba. Whiten the Earth, and Sublime it quickly with Fire, untill the Spirit which thou ſhalt finde in it goe forth of it, and it is called Hermes Bird; for that which aſcends higher is efficacious purity but that which fals to the bottome, is droſſe and corruption. This therefore is Duſt drawn from Duſt, and the begotten of the Philoſophers, the white foliated Earth, in which Gold is to b ſown. *Ariſt.pa.*371.

Lullius. Gather carefully what thou findeſt in the middle ſublimated, leſt it fly away into Smoke, becauſ that is the approved ſought fo Good, the better Beſt, the whit foliated Earth coagulating as th Rennet of a Lamb, the Aſhes o Aſhes, the Salt of Nature, the begotte otten Infant, the firſt and neareſt Matter of Metals, the firſt Subject i which are its proper Elements, ɔ wit of Natur'd Nature; the ioiſt and temperate Matter ought ɔ be reduced and fixt, till it flow ith its Ferment, like Wax withut Smoke, and endure all Fire. herefore labour with it to Silver, nd thou maiſt quickly begin the agiſtery; nor let it wax old withut commixtion, becauſe thou aiſt not take it, unleſſe new made ter the Birth with its Blood. *Lul. odic.p.*117.

Daſtin. If from Subliming little ſhall ome forth and clean, the Fire will et be little. Therefore let it bee icreaſt. But if much and unclean, e Fire is ſuperfluous, therefore t it be withdrawn. But if much nd clean, then the proportion is ound. *Daſt.ſpec.p.*48.

Roſar. The Duſt aſcending higher from he Dregs, is Aſhes, Honoured, Sublimed, Extracted from the Aſhes, but that which remains below is Aſhes of Aſhes, inferiour, vilified, condemned Aſhes, a dreg, and like droſſe. Therefore make a difference between its clear and limpid, becauſe when it ſhall aſcend moſt white as Snow, it will be compleat, therefore gather it carefully, leſt it fly away into Smoke, becauſe that is the very ſought for good, the white foliated Earth, congealing what is to be congealed. *Roſarius Arnoldi, pa.*427.

Geber. The Calx or Body muſt be often imbibed, that thence it might be ſublimed, and more yet purged then before, becauſe the Calx doth not at all, or very difficultly climb upward, aſſiſted by the Spirit. *Geber.lib. ſummæ perfectionis.p.*172.

Artephius. O Nature how doſt thou burn Bodies into Spirit, which could not be done, if the Spirit were not firſt

irſt incorporated with the Bodies, nd the Bodies with the Spirit made volatile, and afterwards permanent. Therefore the compound eceives its cleanſing by our Fire: viz. by diſſolving the humid, and by ſubliming what is pure and white, the dregs being caſt forth, s a naturall Vomit. For in ſuch a Diſſolution and naturall Sublimation, there is made a deligation of he Elements, a cleanſing and ſeparation of the pure from impure, ſo that the pure and white aſcends upwards, and the impure and earthy remains fixt in the bottome of he Veſſel, which is to be caſt forth and removed (becauſe it is of no value) by receiving onely a middle white ſubſtance. And in his is accompliſht our Philoſophicall and Naturall Sublimation, not in the Vulgar unfit Mercury, which hath no qualities like theſe, with which our Mercury drawn from from the red ſervant is adorned. *Arteph.fo.*21.

The firſt part abides not, unleſſe it be bound to the ſecond in the ſame hour. Idem.

It is fit that the end be reſtored upon its beginning, and the beginning upon the end. Idem.

When the Artiſt ſees the white Soul riſen, let him join her immediately to her Body. When the clean and candid Water ſhall be generated, it is meet we join the Earth to it in the ſame Hour.

Plato. And according to Plato, the Fierineſſe is contraried in the hour of coagulation.

And according to Daſtin, by the acceſſe of Cold, the Water may well be turned into dry Earth. Idem.

Margarita pretioſa. There is one and the ſame thing in the Subject having all theſe properties, and operations; for while it remains in liquefaction, by rea-ned from Act into Habit, then the Body retains the Soul altogether, nor ever hath the power to fly from the Fire; and the Workman hath his purpoſe, which the Auncients had, and then the Spirit remains always with them, ſometimes in Act, and ſometimes in Habit. But a quick and double inſight is altogether neceſſary, ſpecially both in the end of Decoction and Sublimation, that all the ſuperfluities being whitened, the Artiſt may ſee the wonderfull anc terrible Candor, and may preſently obtain his joyfull and quiet reſt after this Conſummation of Labour, for then by infrigidating th Moon, the Sun is hidden in he Bowels, and the Eaſt is joined t the Weſt, Heaven to Earth and Spirituall to Corporall whence is ſaid in Turba, Know y that ye ſhall not Die the purpl Colour, but in Cold. And Hermes

Whoſ

Whoſe Nature hath been hot, if Cold find him, it ſhal not hurt him. And Avicen, Know that he which hath evaporated all, hath wrought well, therefore make it Cold, for then is manifeſt the hidden, and the Manifeſt by infrigidating is hid. And this Infrigidation or cooling s done with reſt, in which there is no operation of the hands, ſince it s the end of operation. *Margarita pretioſa. pa.*204.

That Earth ſo mingled with Lullius. Menſtruous Matter, is called Argent vive, Exuberated, which gather ſpeedily, and while it is new; after its Birth put it in Water of Metals, in digeſtion in a tripode of the Athanor. *Lull. Teſt. p.*21.

This is our Mercury ſublimed, Daſtin. and made fixt from the white altered Earth of Bodies, ariſing firſt wonderfully by the power and help of the Water. This is that Mercury, in ſtead of which the Fools and Idiots aſſume that compounded of common Vitrioll, and Sublimated with Salt, in which the are groſly deceived. *Dunſtan.p.*18.

and

Clangor Buccinæ.

Sublime the Body as much a thou canſt, and boil it with clear Mercury,and when the Body hath drunken ſome part of the Mercury, ſubtilize it with a Fire quick and ſtronger,as thou art able,unti it aſcend in likeneſſe of moſt white Duſt, adhering to the ſides of the Veſſell in manner of Snow ; Bu the Aſhes remaining in the bottome are dregs, and the vilified droſſe of Bodies, and to be caſ away, in which there is no life, becauſe it is moſt light Duſt, which with a little blaſt vaniſheth, becauſe it is nothing but bad Sulphu excluded by Nature.

Then the dregs being caſt away iterate the Sublimation of the moſ white Duſt by it ſelf without it dregs, till it be fixt, and till it ſend ut no dregs, but aſcend moſt urely, like Snow, the which is our ure Quinteſſence; And then thou halt have the Soul Tincting, Cogulating, and Cleanſing, both the ulphur, and the not burning Arſick; which the Alchimiſts may ſe, that with it they might make ilver. *Clangor Bucc.pa.*519.

Petrus Bonus.

When the Water ſhall neceſſaily be generated clean and white, is meet we join the Earth to it, ven in the ſame hour, and thoſe eing joined in their ſeaſon, all four vill be joined, and then the Work perfect; and if they are not joied, then the Water is reſolved nto Smoke, with the Earth, and y conſequence the other Elenents by the force and perſeveance of the Fire, and ſo the Work annihilated; wherefore it is fit n Artiſt know the ſimple Elenents throughly, before he begin heir Compoſition, that he may know know rightly how to compoun them to the conſtitution of th Compound. *Pet. Bonus pa.*221.

Vogel. If any of the purer parts remai in the Earth(which thou maiſt ob ſerve from a certain whiteneſſ promiſcuouſly ſhining) think no much to mingle it again with th ſame Mercury,then Decoct,and a length, as hath been ſaid, Sublim till nothing of the purer eſſenc be left in it. *Vogelius p.*209.

Baſil. Valent. In the laſt day, the World ſha be judged by Fire, that what be fore was by its Maſter made of no thing, might again by Fire be re duced into Aſhes, from which A ſhes the Phœnix might at lengt

*ſil.Valent.pa.*23.

We have ſhewn thee our Water after its congelation with its Ferment, which is then indeed called our Magneſia, and if thou underſtand our Waters, thou wilt alſo underſtand Argent vive. *Lull.Teſt. Fo.*108. Lullius.

THE COROLLARY.

In this Chapter is openly explained the Fable of Phaeton, in Ovids Metamorphoſis. As alſo of Dedalus with his Son Icarus; who when they had made themſelves wings of Feathers, and had faſtned them with Wax, and when with theſe they had flown through the Aire beyond the Labyrinth, it is reported Icarus flying too high, fell into the Sea, in which he was drowned, becauſe the Sun melted the Wax. By his Father Dedalus is underſtood the Sulphur of Nature ſublimated and Philoſophically coagulated. By Icarus the ſame Sulphur ſublimated, but with undue governance of the Artiſt, and continued violence of the Fire, melted into Water, and buried in the dead Sea. In theſe alſo is explained the Fable of our Engliſh Roger Bacon the Monk, of whom it is related, That he compoſed a Brazen Head, whoſe cuſtody (after many lucubrations) he committed to hi ſervant, that while he refreſht hi tired ſpirit with ſleep, he would carefully obſerve the time, that as ſoo as ever it ſpake, in the very momen he ſhould wake him; but the ſervan being aſleep, the Brazen Head utte red theſe words, Time is, and agai an hour after, Time is paſt, whe by their negligence the Work was de prived of life and annihilated which alſo appears in the aſſertio of that excellent Philoſopher Petr Bonus in theſe words:

If in the time of Generation th Soul ſhall ſtand in the Fire, an er ſtrength prevail by the force f Spirit, then ſhe flies away, and raws with her the Body to flight, ıd the Workman remains frurate of his purpoſe; and expects ıat which hath been already ome and gone, and ſhall never ome again hereafter, becauſe it is ingled with that condemned arth, whence it is impoſſible it ould again be ſeparated.

But as the Condemned or rejected arth is not found out, unleſſe the re be ſeparated from the impure;
r is that ſaid to be pure, which in ſelf contains feculency, of conſe-ence it muſt be prepared with the eateſt Induſtry, nor with leſſe vilancy is our Phyſicall ſubject com-unded firſt by Nature for us, and rmed into a Metallick Form, ſo that may be reduced into the firſt Mat-r, and by our skill, viz. by the Se- ration, Putrefaction, Imbibition, blimation, Conjunction of the Elements, there might ariſe at length a new Form, which is the Baſis of the Philoſophick Work as is manifeſt in the Chapter. Whence the ſaying of Artepheus is apparent. viz. That the firſt part remains not except it be bound to the ſecond, even in the ſame Hour. But tha Allegation is done by Coagulation the Coagulation by Infrigidation even in that Hour in which the Artiſt ſhall ſee, and in his Judgemen perceive, the whole moſt pure ſubſtance ſublimated from its rejecte Earth. Which ſecret of ſecrets obſcured of all Philoſophers in thei ſundry Ænigmaes, concealed and diverſly diſperſt in their Books, I ha in brief ſo clearly opened, as of no the like hitherto. And this is t Preparation in which (as Senio ſaith) men are blinded ſince the know not that the Stone is prep red with this Preparation.

CHAP. VI.

The Weights of the ſecond Work.

IN the operation of our Magiſtery, we ſhall need one onely Veſſell, or Furnace, one Diſpoſition, which is meant after the Preparation of the Stone. *Roſar. Philoſoph.pa.*240. Roſar.

The ſecond Work is to turn Water and Fire into Earth, and Aire into one ſimple Subſtance compounded of Simples. *Daſtin ſpecul.pa.*106. Daſtin.

If thou impoſe the Medicines equally, thou wilt perceive no Error, but if thou adde or diminiſh, make haſte to correct it: whence if a Deluge proceed it drowns the Region, but if too much Siccity ſhould be, it burns up the Roots of Hearbs. Who therefore putrifies the Body in the equall part, till it be exſiccated, makes the whole, one Daſtin.

white Body, for they are at once Inſpiſſated, Incinerated, and Exſiccated ; and this is the Head of the World. Of the Work therefore (as Democritus ſaith) let part anſwer part equally. Idem pag. 122.

Ripleus. In the beginning take our Stones and bury them every one in the Sepulchre of another, and join them together in equall Mariage, that they may lie together, then let them cheriſh their ſeed ſixe weeks, nouriſh their naturall Conception, and preſerve it, not ariſing all the while from the bottome of their Sepulchre. Which ſecret deceives many. Rip. pa. 44.

Ripleus. Alſo thus underſtand, that in our Conjunction, the Male, our Sun, ought to have three parts of his Water, and his Wife nine ; which ought to be three to him. Rip. pa. 39.

Maſſa Solis & Lunæ. We cannot with our own proper er hands work on Mercury, but vith ten ſpecies, which we call our ands in this Work, that is, nine arts of Water, and the tenth of Earth. Maſſa Solis & Lunæ. pag. 57.

But ſince there are three parts Roſar. f his red Water with him, let it Arnold. e ſublimed on this manner time fter time, till it be fixt downward. *Roſar. Arnold. pa.*449.

Put clean Bodies in this clean Mercury, poiſed in an equal balance. *Idem pa.*447.

Boil him at the warm Sun, un- Daſtin. ill he hath dried his Water, which eing exſiccated, pound him aain with water to his Weight, and oil him at the Sun, till he be drid into a Stone; doe this oftenimes till he hath drunk of his Water ten times his own quantity, nd become dry, hard and red. *Daſtin ſpec.pa.*191.134.

Son, it behoveth thee to mingle Lullius.

the Earths of the foreſaid Sulphurs, that is, of Gold, and Silver together, and prepare them by giving them the fourth part of their Weight, of the ſaid menſtrous Matter, by digeſting and drying, as it is done in the Creation of Sulphur, untill it hath drunk four parts of the ſaid menſtruous Matter, and be diſpoſed to Sublimation; which thou ſhalt ſublime in Fire of the fourth degree. Lull. Teſt.p.24.

Daſtin. Take of the ſincere Body one part, and of the other Copper three, and mingle them together with Vinegar. Senior in Turba. It is meet the Water exceed the Earth nine times, that ſo in a Decinary number, which is a perfect number, the whole Work may be conſummate. But (as Dioſtenes ſaith) if too much of the Water be at once impoſed, it is not contained in the Earth; but if too much much be ſubſtracted, it is not joined to the Earth; Whence all the Water is not to be at once imposed on the Earth. Therefore divide it into three parts, and every of them into another third, becauſe o one may better fight againſt one, then againſt a number of more: Mingle the Hot with the Cold, the Humid with the Dry, and the mixt ſhall be temperate, neither Hot nor Cold, nor Moiſt nor Dry; for one tempers another, making the mixt adequate. Daſt. Spec.pa. 177.134.

Baſilius Valentinus.

A man may be eaſily ſtifled in great Waters, and little Waters are eaſily exſiccated with the heat of the Sun, ſo that they may be as nothing. Therefore that the deſired Work might be obtained, a certain meaſure in the commixtion of the Philoſophick liquorous Subſtance muſt be obſerved, leſt the greater overcome and oppreſſe the the leſſer Proportion, by which Generation might be hindred, and leſt the leſſer, in reſpect of th greater, ſhould be too weak to exercife equall Dominion, for grea ſhowers of rain hurt the Fruit and too much drought produces no true Perfection. Therefore i Neptune have fitly prepared his Bath, weigh well the permanen Water, and conſider with diligen care, that thou doe not any thing toomuch or too little to him. *Baſil. Valent. pa.*42.

Arnold. Take of the red Water and White, as much of the one as o the other, according to weight and put them together in a Cucurbite, made of Glaſſe, ſtrong and thick, having a Mouth like an Urinall, afterward the whole Water will be Citrine, even ſoon enough, and ſo will the true Elixer be perfected in reſpect of both, {viz. perfect Impregnation, and true rue Coition. *Arnold. in Comment. Iortulani p.*34.

Daſtin.

THE COROLLARY.

Leſt perhaps Ripley and Daſti our Countrimen, and moſt excellen Philoſophers, ſhould in this Chapte ſeem to ſome, to differ amon themſelves : ſince Ripley takes equall parts, and joins them in equa Wedlock ; but Daſtin affirms th Water ought nine times to exceed th Earth, that ſo in a Decinary, whic is a perfect Number, the whole Wor might be conſummate : I thought worth my labour to reconcile this appearing contradiction. As therefo he that well diſtinguiſhes, teach well ; ſo he that knows this diſtinct on of time, ſhall forthwith have t Solution of this doubt.

For Ripley firſt ſpeaks of the fir Compoſition in the ſecond or Phil ſophick Work, where the Earth a pure Water prepared exactly befo muſt be equally joined in equall Pr portio ortion. But Daſtin utters that his pinion of Imbibitions, after the erfection of the ſecond Work; and o while they are diſtinguiſht, they re underſtood, and that eaſily. But hat means Ripley in theſe words, iz. That they ſhould lie together ix Weeks, not riſing all the while rom the bottome of their Sepulhre? this muſt be enquired and earched into, ſince he affirms it a ecret which hath deceived many. That Conjunction is done, that even s a Chicken is made of an Egge after Putrefaction, ſo after this Conunction and due Putrefaction, we may attain the Complement of the Work.

Therefore we muſt know, if any thing may be born by Putrefaction, it is neceſſary it happen after this manner. The Earth by a certain hidden and included humidity, is reduced into a certain corruption or deſtruction, which is the beginning of Putrefaction, which ought to b nouriſht with ſuch a tempered heat as that nothing exhale from th Compound, or be ſublimed to th top of the Veſſel; but that the Maſculine and Feminine, the Matte and the Form, Agent and Patient remain together. The Water in th Earth, and the Earth unſeparate from the Water, are contained together, as the yolk of an Egge, include in the inner thin skin, till the tim of Putrefaction looſe the reins, whic will not be done ſooner then in th ſpace of forty days; for as Natur hates ſudden mutations or alterations, ſo no Putrefaction is made bu in a long time, and appointed, a Daſtin elegantly ſaid, viz. The ca lidity of the Aire, ſubtility of th Matter, gentleneſſe of the Fire ſtability of Reſt, equality of Compounds, gravity of Patience, an the maturity of Time, doe promote and induce Putrefaction, an

herefore then alſo the Air is to be empered, the Thick ſubtilized, the Fire reſtrained, Reſt preſerved, Proportion adequated, Patience trengthened, and the Time expected, till Nature proceeding natu-ally ſhal compleat her own Work.

But that I may return to the purpoſe, and adde Corollary to Corollary; we muſt obſerve that in Preparation, hree parts of the Spirit are aſſumed o one part of the imperfect Body, and at laſt about the time of the Birth hree parts of imperfect Body are aſſumed to one of Spirit, and this not nce, but often. But in the ſecond Work, which of Philoſophers is called he firſt; firſt, part is joined with part, afterward three parts of Body to one of Spirit, and that the oftner for Imbibitions, and at length three of Spirit to one part of perfect Body for inceration or fermentation, by which is performed our Myſtical, Divine, and more then perfect Work numberleſly exceeding the very degree of Perfection.

CHAP. VII.

Of Imbibition. 4th: Re

Parmenides in Turbam. LAſtly, nouriſh ſuch an animated thing with its own Milk that is, with its own Water, from which is concreated the Work, o the thing begun from the beginning. Exercit. in Turbam p.165.

Ripley. Give him the fourth part o new Water, and yet he ought t have many more Imbibitions; giv him the ſecond, and afterward the third alſo, not forgetting th ſaid Proportion: And when tho haſt made ſeven Imbibitions, the thou muſt turn the Wheel abou again, and putrefie all that Matte without addition. Ripley pa.51.

Clangor. Bucc. If thou wouldſt Volatiſe or Imbibe, thy prepared Elixer, [the ſe cond, third, or fourth time, this muſt be done with the fourth part of the Elixir of Mercury, but doe this oft-times, untill the part of Water periſh, that is, waſte or conſume, ſo that it aſcend no further. But yet I command ye, pour not on the Water at once, leſt the Ixir be drowned, but by little and little, that is, pour it in at ſeven times, and powder it, and laſt of all exſiccate. *Clangor. Bucc.pa.*505.

Moiſten and beat it together Hermes. many days, and this nine times, which are aſſigned by the nine Eagles, and in every Diſſolution and Coagulation, the effect thereof ſhall be augmented. *Hermes de Chemia pa.*179.

Beat the Earth oftentimes, and Avicenna. by little and little imbibe it from eight days to eight days, Decoct and after moderately Calcine it in Fire, and let it not weary thee to reiterate the Work oftentimes, for the Earth bears not fruit without often watering, whence if it be dry, it thirſtingly drinks up its humidity and wet. *Avicen.p.*420.

Daſtin. If ye make it without weight, Death will befall it, therefore put upon it all the reſt of its Humor, temper it neither too much, nor too little; becauſe if there be much, a Sea of perturbation will be made, but if little, it will be burnt to a brand. For the heat of the Fire (as Avicen ſaith) if it may not finde Humidity which it dries up, it burns, but if thou pour in much moiſture at once, thou wilt not deſiccate but diſſolve. Therefore the Weight is every way to be conſidered, leſt too much ſiccity or ſuperfluous Humour corrupt, that through thy whole Work thou diſſolve ſo much by Inhumation, as fals ſhort by Aſſation, and diminiſh ſo much by Aſſation, as the Inhumation diſſolves

Dastin. It is meet the King reſt in a ſweet Bath, till by little and little he hath drunk the Trinity of his Nouriſher, and let Drink be after Meat and not Meat after Drink; therefore let him eat and drink one after another with diſcretion; deſi not therefore to moiſten, decoc and deſiccate the King, till he hat devoured his Mothers Milk, th Queen with him being nine tim proſtrate on the Earth. *Daſti ſpec.fo.*4.

When thy Matter hath conceived, expect the Birth, and when it hath brought forth, thou muſt have Patience in Nouriſhing the Boy, till he can indure the Fire, and then of him thou maiſt make free Projection, becauſe the firſt Digeſtion is made. *Lull. Theor. fo.*30. Lullius.

At length nouriſh ſuch an animated Body with his own Milk, that is his Water, of which is concreated the Work, or the thing begun from the beginning, but concerning the feeding it is taught, Parmenides taught, that the Proportion be ſo ordered in it ſelf, that there be three parts of Water to one of Lead. *Parmenides in Turba. p.*165.

Lullius. With that permanent humidity, which likewiſe took its originall from vive Argent, imbibe our Stone, becauſe by it the parts thereof are made moſt clear, as is manifeſt, when after its perfect putrefaction, from every corruptible thing, and chiefly from the two ſuperfluous Humours, viz. the unctuous, aduſtible, phlegmatick, and evaporable parts, it is reduced into its proper incombuſtible Subſtance of Sulphur, and without that Subſtance, it is never corrected, augmented nor multiplied. *Lull. Codic.pa.*46.

Artephius. The Water is living which came to water its Earth, that it might Germinate and bring forth fruit in its ſeaſon; for by watering, or bedewing, all things born of the Earth

Earth are generated: The Earth therefore doth not germinate without the watering and humidity of May dew, that doth waſh, penetrate, and whiten Bodies, like rain Water, and of two Bodies make a new one. *Arteph.fo.*17.

Roſarius Philoſ. Beat the Earth and imbibe it with Water by little and little, from eight days to eight days, decoct it in Dung, becauſe by Inhumation, Aduſtion is taken away: and let it not weary thee to reiterate this often, becauſe the Earth bears not fruit without frequent watering. *Roſar.Philoſoph.p.*355.

Daſtin. As often as ye moiſten the Aſhes, deſiccate them by turns, but if it be moiſtned before it be deſiccated and made Duſt, it is drowned, inebriated, and reduced to nothing; for he that makes it without weight (as Triſmegiſtus ſaith) kills and ſtrangles it, becauſe who drinks and thirſts not, cheriſhes indigeſtion, digeſtion, and doth invite and induce the Dropſie. Daſt, ſpec. pa. 209.

Afflictes. Then muſt it be beaten, and with the remaining Water and a half, be ſeaven times moiſtned, with permanent Water conſumed, it muſt be putrefied, till the deſired thing be obtained. Afflictes in Turba.

Nicares. But ye ſhall moiſten this redneſs ſeaven times in the remaining Water, or till it can drink all its Water, then boil it till it be deſiccated and turned to dry Earth, then let it be put in a kindled Fire forty days, untill it putrefie, and the Colours thereof appear with the Aſhes. Nicares in Turba 102.

Daſtin. As the ſame thing is both an Embryo, Infant, Boy, and Man, paſſing from an incompleat Eſſence, to a perfect Complement: So alſo our Compound, by increaſing paſſes from one thing to ano-nother better thing, and from incompleat Eſſence, with its own Milk is carried forth to his complement of the Elixir. And therefore all its Compound is of the form of the Elements. Wherefore Morienus ſaith, the diſpoſition of that work is like the creation of a Man, when as he is nouriſhed of himſelf by increaſing from day to day, and from moneth to moneth, till he hath attained his Youthfull ge, and in a certain time be compleated. *Daſt. ſpec.pa.*150.

Lullius. The near cauſe of this fixation s a very little mixtion of both by heir leaſt parts,ſo that the height of the Volatile, may not excell he height of the fixt Body, but et the vertue of the fixt Spirit,excell the height of the unfixt, according to the intent of fixation. Son if thou underſtand this, thou maiſt have the Treaſure of Heaven and Earth. It is required when the

the Body is ſo naturally augmented, and nouriſht by convenien moiſture, that then near the meaſure, thou imbibe it with the mor Water of its nutrition or augmentation, according to the Weight revealed by Art, to the conformity of principles, and the qualit of the Body given to be augmented, and let it be decocted with gentle Fire, exſiccating the naturall heat, and not exceeding until it attain its perfect whiteneſſe. *Lullii Codic.pa.*157.

Lullius. And note that after Imbibitio they ought to be buried ſeave days, Therefore iterate the Wor many times, though it be tedious and the Weight in this muſt b every way obſerved, leſt the to much ſiccity or ſuperfluous Humour ſpoile it in the operation, a namely decoct ſo much by Aſſation, as the Diſſolution hath added and by Imbibition diſſolve a muc nuch as hath been waſted by Aſation, wherefore thou ſhall ſweety and not haſtily irrigate the earth from eight days to eight lays. Idem.

Daſtin. If one Imbibition, one Decoction, one Contrition doth ſuffice, hey would not ſo much have iteated their ſayings, but therefore hey did this, that alwaies they night inſiſt on the Work, without divorce and tediouſneſſe. Wherefore alſo they ſay, Hope, nd ſo ſhalt thou obtain. But vhen it is exſiccated, then by anoher Courſe, let it be delivered to nſatiable Comeſtion, that being y degrees between every Inceraion, burnt into Aſhes, it might ry the power thereof. *Daſtin Epiſt.fo.*4.

Therefore to nouriſh this ur Infant we adviſe with Phyſici- ns, that (ſince he is of the Royall tock, and the moſt pure conſtituti- n) he might not be delivered to ny ſtrange Nurſe, but might ſuck he Breſts of his Mother, who as he had before nouriſht him in the Vomb with her own Blood; ſo being ow come to Maturity, he is to be ouriſht, and in a due proportion ed with the exuberated Blood, cir- ulated and rectified through the Mamillary veins. And the medicinall meaſure of that Milk, let it be weekly the fourth part of the weight of the Infant; But let him keep this Diet for ſeaven Weeks, till he be ſo Medicinally fed that while in a glaſſen Lodge (ordained and firmly ob-ſerated by Phyſicians and Philoſophers) he be placed and repoſed in a Bath, and being lulled aſleep, his limbs diſſolve and melt with ſweat, which by the help of Art and Nature, and due governance, ſhall reſume their former ſhape, renued, and their ſtrength ſo multiplied, that now he deſires Kingly food, with which nouriſhment in a ſhort ſpace he will become a King, ſtronger then a King, and ſo ſtout in Battell, that he alone being a moſt powerfull Conqueror, will obtain the Victory againſt ten thouſand Enemies. Therefore ſeek this King, whom who ſo hath for his Defence, ſhall command all Sublunary things.

CHAP. VIII.

Of Fermentation.

5:th Reg.

Tauladanus.

BY the Teſtimony of all Philoſophers there are three parts of e Elixir, viz. Soul, Body, and pirit; The Soul is onely the Ferent or Form of the Elixir, the dy is the Paſte or Matter, which o parts are to be drawn from etals only; to wit, the Form from e Sun and Moon, the Matter om Jupiter, Saturn, Venus, and ars, as alſo Lullius affirms. But e third part of the Stone is Spi:, which ſince it is the Seat and hariot of the Soul, it doth pour e Soul into the Body, and comunds and joins theſe two exemes with an indiſſoluble nd of agreement, which Mediar being removed, the Soul can ever enter league with the Body. or two extremes agree not well, nor

nor tarry in one place, unleſſe they are reconciled and confederated by the help of a mean. This Spirit it nothing elſe then that liquor attenuating the Form and Matter o the Stone, and reducing it to a ſpirituall Nature, which Spirit is ſometimes called of the Philoſophers, Heaven, ſometimes ſolutiv Mercury, ſometimes menſtruou Matter, ſometimes Quinteſſence and infinite other names. Tauladan pa. 338.

Ripley. Unto thy Compound adde th fourth part the Ferment, which Ferment is onely of the Sun an Moon. And know that there ar three Ferments, two of Bodies i pure Nature which ought to b altered, as we have told thee, th third moſt ſecret, which we nov meditate, is that firſt Earth wit its proper green Water; wherefor while the Lion thirſts, make him drink, untill his body be broken. Ripley pa. 56.

Tak

Semita Semitæ.

Take the fourth part of the erment, and let that Ferment be iſſolved, and made Earth like an nperfect Body, and prepared after the ſame manner and order; oreover joine and imbibe it with e aforeſaid bleſſed Water; for erment prepares the imperfect ody, and converts it to its own ature, and it is not Ferment unſſe Sun and Moon. *Semita Semi æ pa.*444.

Rachaidibus.

Give it fermented Ferment, eually elementated with every E ment, which is Gold; give it the urth part, but which is firſt calned and diſſolved into Water.

erment is twofold, white and red, which the Ferment of the Sun, the Sun, and of the Moon, the loon. But let the Ferment be the urth part of our Copper. *Raaidibus pa.*393.

Dunſtan.

Thou wilt have no perfect Ferent till it be altered, with our Mercury, from its firſt qualities, into a new whiteneſſe, between Putrefaction and Alteration. Dunſtan.pa.7.

Lullius. They who knew not Natures indigency, thought this Ferment ought to be prepared with new menſtrous Matter, in which is Fire againſt Nature, not perceiving the perdition of the Temperature from which the Body departs, by reaſon of the burning Fire, viz. againſt Nature. Ferment, to wit, a Body, as much a it is underſtood for Ferment, i not prepared but with natural Fire and Water of Mercury. *Lul Codic.pa.*211.

Roſar. Take one part of Ferment, an three of imperfect Body, diſſolv the Ferment in Water of Mercur equall to it, boil it together wit a moſt gentle Fire, and coagula that Ferment, that it may be as a imperfect Body. *Roſar. Philoſop p.*317.

Arnold. Take red Earth, and form it into thin Plates, or ſhaved Duſt, and put it in Water, as hath been taught, and it ſhall not be diſſolved in it, but onely calcined into red Duſt; which done, remove the Water warily, and put it into another Veſſell, like that in which it is, ſo that the calcined Duſt of red Earth may remain in its Veſſell without Water, and in the removed Water put white Earth, and that ſhall be diſſolved, and ſo Water ſhall profit thee, and ſhall not be ſpoiled. Arnold. in Cament. Horulani pa. 31.

Lullius. In the preparation of the Ferment, before its laſt Fermentation we uſe vulgar Mercury, not onely ſolemnly prepared, viz. into Virgins Milk, but as it exiſts in its Nature, by the alone Sublimation to this, that it might reduce the Body of Ferment to its ſimplicity, and it may be the mean of conjoining Tinctures. Lull. Codic. pa. 215.

Daſtin. Let it be given to an inſatiable Devourer, afterwards it muſt be nouriſht with groſſer meat, that compleat Digeſtion being received, it may paſſe from the Mothers into the Fathers Kingdome. Daſt. Epiſt. pa. 6.

Tauladanus As the Ferment of Gold is Gold; of Silver, is Silver; ſo the Ferment of Iron, is Iron, of Copper, is Copper, and of Lead, is Lead. Therefore every Agent acts according to its form. To ſome, what we have ſpoken may ſeem new; as if the Elixir could be made of all ignoble things which ſhall turn all other things as well noble as ignoble, either into Mars, or Jupiter, or Saturn, o Venus. Which although it now ſeem new and incredible to man learned men, and chiefly to Petru Bonus, a man of ſingular learning ye yet there is no neceſſary reaſon, which forbids it may be done. Nay if it were not done, Alchymy had been loſt, and the Art of Chymiſtry might have been worthily called a Figment and a Fable. For Nature hath eſtabliſhed this Law, viz. That as often as Actives are rightly joined with Paſſives, Action and Paſſion doe immediately follow, and the alteration doth always reſent and ſavour of the nature of the Agent. And as often as that which before had the ſtrength and qualities of the Patient, be ſo diſpoſed that it can ſtoutly act, it is neceſſary that the alteration be anſwerable and conformable to the Nature of the Agent from which it ſuffered. Wherefore if ignoble Metals diſpoſed to ſuffer or change by the action of Gold or Silver, rightly diſpoſed to Action, it is neceſſary that noble Metals diſpoſed to ſuffer ſhould be changed by ignoble Metals, skilfully diſpoſed to Act. *Tauladanus pa.*297.

Clangor Bucc. Let the Ferment be prepared, that the powder may be white and ſubtill, if thy intention proceed to white; but if to red, then let thy powder be of Gold prepared moſt Citrine; and there ſhall not be other Ferment: the reaſon is, becauſe thoſe two Bodies are ſhining, in which are tingent ſplendid Raies, excelling other Bodies naturally in whiteneſſe and redneſſe. And if thou wouldſt ferment white Earth, divide that Earth into two parts, one part thou ſhalt augment to a white Elixir, with its conſerved Water, (and ſo it never ceaſes to be of it) and the other part put into its Glaſſe, that is, the Furnace of its Digeſtion, and increaſe the Fire to it, untill by the force of the Fire, it be turned into moſt red Duſt, even as dry combuſt combuſt Saffron. And if thou wouldſt that the moſt white Elixir have the Tincture of Redneſſe, transforming and tincting Mercury, the Moon and every Body into the moſt true Sun, or Solificous Body; then ferment its three parts with another part and a half of moſt pure prepared Gold, and let the powder be moſt ſubtile with two parts of Solificous Water artificially reducing by Union by the leaſt parts into one Chaos even unto the inmoſt part of the Body, and place it in its Glaſſe in his Fire, and decoct it, that the moſt true bloody red Stone might ſhine forth. Clang. Bucc.p.529.

Lullius. There is no other Ferment but of the Sun or Moon. And it is not Ferment untill the ſaid Bodies be turned into their firſt Matter, becauſe it is expedient, that Ferment be compounded of the Sun, and the moſt ſubtile Earth. Wherefore if thou knoweſt not how to reduce two perfect Bodies into their firſt Matter, thou canſt have no Ferment. Lull. Theor.p.92.

Maſſa Solis & Lunæ.

For this is Minerall, that when thou putſt Water on the Earth, the White overcomes the Citrine and Red; and whitens them into whiteneſſe of Silver. Then the Citrine overcomes the White and Red, ſo that it makes them Citrine, above the Citrinity of Gold, and then the Red overcomes the Citrine and White, and reddens them into a Tyrian redneſſe, and when thou ſeeſt theſe rejoice. Maſſa Solis & Lunæ. pa. 212.

THE COROLLARY.

As in this Chapter is clearly and plainly taught the excellent manner of Fermentation, ſo to the unexperienced Reader, this contradiction may appear, between Raimund and Ripley in theſe words, viz. whilſt Raimund affirms two Ferments onely, one of the Sun, another of the Moon; but Ripley addes a third, which is called the Green Lion, and the unclean Body, which is alſo called Laton, which Laton ſince indeed is no other thing then an imperfect compound Body of Gold and Silver according to Morienus; that third of Ripley is clearly demonſtrated to be no other thing then immature Gold and Silver; and ſo they doe not differ but agree in matter of Ferment, though for immaturities ſake it be ſignified by another name. To this our Dunſtan Archbiſhop of Cane performed without Vulgar Gold and Silver. He thus taught herefore that we ſhould take heed : For although Gold and Silver may e ſubtilized and mingled with Tinctures, and be reduced to leſſer Elixirs; yet the way according to he Doctrine of the Philoſophers, is ot in them; For their Gold and ilver are two chief Tinctures, Red nd White buried in one and the ame Body, which by Nature never ttained their perfect Complement, et they are ſeparable from their Earthly Lutoſity, and accidentall Droſſe, and then by their proper qua-ties ſo commixtible with Earths ure Red and White, and are found ſo t Ferments for them, that they may o way be ſaid to need any other hing. In which words is deſcribed o other thing then Ripleys green Lion, or their Gold, not Gold, un-eſſe in poſsibility while as yet imma-ure. Which always and onely is ſet

apart and choſen of all Philoſophers; and theſe that underſtand, for their firſt Matter. Whence it is clearly manifeſt that neither Vulgar Gold nor Silver ought to be taken for th firſt Matter, but yet it is doubtfull If, why, and when they are neceſſar for us, to the Compoſition of the Elixir. To which I anſwer from th authority of the Philoſophers, That they are ſo neceſſary, as withou them the Elixir cannot be perfected But yet not as they are Vulgar Gol and Silver, but being ſo altered a that they may be reduced to thei firſt Matter, and while they are fix by Nature, may be made Volatile b Art, and then at length while the are in ſuch a Condition, it ſhall b impoſſible for any Artiſt to reduc them again to Vulgar Gold and Silver, after the manner of Goldſmith becauſe then according to the Turb the Body becomes incorporate, as a ſo Roſarius witneſſeth. He tha

nows ſo to deſtroy Gold, that it e no more Gold, has attained the reateſt ſecret. And when it is ſo repared, then it ſhall be the firſt roper Diſh, of which our Infant nouriſht, and by Philoſophers hall have the name of Ferment. Vhich, after the Stone be come o its perfect Redneſſe, and hath een nouriſht with the Mothers Milk, it ought to be joined with s red Earth for the accompliſhment of the Elixir, that it might ender a more then perfect Tincture, and might communicate its ixt Nature, to the prepared Medicine, which being ſpecificated it might at length become perfect. Therefore hence it appears, That why, and when Vulgar Gold and Silver are not neceſſary to the complement of the Work. That therefore I may briefly reduce to one Harmony this appearing Controverſie (which the Philoſophers underſtanding one ano- another mutually, deliver purpoſely in intricate terms) in theſe words of Guido Montanus, viz. Although the Philoſophers Stone may be made even to Whiteneſſe and Redneſſe without Vulgar Gold or Silver, yet the Elixir cannot be made without Vulgar Gold or Silver, altered and prepared as before. But that I may conclude this Corollary, always obſerve, that after the Work of Winter is performed, and thou ſhalt ſee the Sun exalted in Aries, and that then the Philoſophick Work be begun, That in that very houre we ought to prepare Ferments, becauſe they need long Preparation, and it would be the greateſt inconvenience, that when the King ſhould hunger, food ſhould be wanting, or that there ſhould not be a Diſh of Dainties prepared. Therefore let every Artiſt be provident.

CHAP. IX.

Of Projection.

A Dry earthy Body tincts not, unleſſe it be tincted, and beauſe it enters not, therefore it alers not. Therefore it tincts not Gold, becauſe the hidden Spirit hereof ought firſt to be extracted rom its Belly by our white Waer, that it might become altogeher ſpirituall. *Arteph.fo.*13. Artephius.

Many through ignorance have deſtroied their Work, when they have made Projection upon impure Metall; for their Tinctures by reaſon of Corruption doe not emain, but vaniſh, becauſe they emoved not from the Bodies hoſe things which after Projection are brittle, dark, and black. See herefore thou firſt Project thy Medicine on Ferment, then that Ferment will be brittle as Glaſſe; Ripley.

then

then caſt that brittle Subſtance upon Bodies clean and very pure, and preſently thou ſhalt ſee them curiouſly coloured with Tincture which will abide all Trials. So make three, four, or five Projections till the Tincture of thy Medicine begin to decreaſe, then is there an end of making further Projection. Ripley pa.62.

Avicenna. But the manner of Projection is, that thou Project one part of the foreſaid Medicine upon a hundred parts of fuſed or powred Gold, and it makes it frangible; and the whole will be a Medicine of which one part Projected upon a hundred of any fuſed Metall turns it into the beſt Gold. And likewiſe if thou work with the Moon; But if the Medicine or Elixir ſhould not have ingreſſe, take of the Stone extracted in the firſt operation, and of the foreſaid Mercury a like quantity, and mingle gle them together, and incorporate them by grinding upon a Stone, and then diſtilling in a Bath, that they might the better be joined together, then dry them. *Avicenna pa.*435:

Lullius. Son, compound the Minerals, which pertain to the Minerall Magiſtery, by multiplying their vertue thus: Take one part of the Powder or Duſt, viz. an ounce or pound, and Project it upon ten parts of Amalgama, made of one part of the Moon or Sun, and five of Mercury, and the whole ſhall be turned into Powder or Duſt ccording to the condition of Duſt; and Project one of thoſe en parts, upon other ten of Amalgama or ſimple Mercury, ſo proceed by Computing and Proecting untill thou ſee the Matter urned neither into Duſt nor Meall; but into a hard frangible Maſſe, and make triall of it, viz.

how many parts,one part can turn into Metall; and by this manner thou ſhalt neceſſarily finde the end of Projection, otherwiſe thou ſhalt never finde it, unleſſe it be firſt converted into a hard frangible Maſſe, as we told thee before. Lull.Teſt.pa.64.

Ventura. But this is the greateſt Secret, that the vertue of the Medicine ſhall be alſo augmented in the Projection, not onely in extenſive Quantity, but alſo in the vertue of Perfection and Goodneſſe, viz. If the Medicine be Projected in a due Proportion upon a Body, and the whole be put into Fire,and augmented by its degrees, and be oftner diſſolved, and oftner coagulated, till it be more fluxill then Wax. Wherefore if in Projection the Medicine be ſo much weakned that it cannot have ingreſſe any longer, ingreſſe is given to it if part of the firſt Medicine be joined ned to it, and it be decocted by diſſolving and coagulating till it flow. But by how much leſſe the vertue of the Medicine is, it is neceſſarily convenient to adminiſter the Fire from the beginning, and according to the degrees of Time, by ſo much the more temperature. But if there ſhall nothing remain of the firſt and moſt perfect Medicine which might be added, (which leſt it happen to him, the ingenious Artiſt muſt chiefly beware) thence it will be fit to doe otherwiſe. The third manner is (according to Roſarius) that a little part of the Medicine, whether white or red, be joined with the Stone or our Mercury, (which was never in the Work) and let it be put to digeſtion as before, and decocted by Putrefying, Subliming, and Fixing, untill the whole become a tinctured Oil, then again hou ſhalt have the perfect Stone; and this is done in a few days, and with leſſe coſt, labour, and hazard. But always keep ſome part for Ferment, as well of the White as Red; and this wiſe Conſideration ſhall excuſe thee of much trouble. Ventura pa. 195.

Clangor. Let one part of Medicine be taken, and ten parts of putrefied Mercury, ſo that Mercury be made hot even to Fumoſity, and then let the Medicine be caſt upon it, which will preſently flow, even penetrating the leaſt parts; then by a convenient Fire made ſtrong, let the flowing Mercury be gathered together, of which let a little part be taken, and let as much of his vive Mercury be put to the Fire, and let the Weight be proved; If the added Mercury ſhall notably recede, then it affects the Medicine to its fartheſt parts. But if the Body in the Body ſhall not be notably broken, but that the Matter Matter be yet frangible, and too ſoft or hard, then again take a little of this, and as much of crude Mercury, and in all things proceed, as hath been ſaid, till thou have thy intent. Clangor. Bucc.pa. 539.

THE COROLLARY.

As the Proviſion of Citizens, if it were not ſupplied by Country men, would ſuddenly be waſted, and in like manner the great Store of the Country men themſelves quickly exhauſted, if after the Work of Winter, viz. the Preparation of the Earth, and winnowing of the laid up Corn, it were not again delivered to naturating Nature, and again laid up in her lap to putrefie, diſſolve, and multiply: In like manner alſo, in the Philoſophick Work, whoſe included Matter is not eaſily found out, whoſe myſticall manner of Preparation is not underſtood without infinite Lucubrations; laſtly, whoſe Proceſſe (that it might be brought unto a degree above perfection) though long, difficult, and hazardous, before that the immenſe and infinite treaſure be perfected; No otherwiſe that being performed (unleſſe we ſhortly, and with a little coſt and trouble obtain the manner of multiplying) would all that be ſpeedily conſumed, which was gotten by long and unwearied induſtry.

Therefore take this for a Corollary, that ſince it is manifeſt from what hath been ſaid, that Medicine is to be multiplied two ways. Firſt in quantity and quality, or elſe in quantity onely. In quantity and quality it is done by diſſolution and fermentation; in quantity, onely by Projection: Thou muſt with all care and providence take heed, leſt through ignorance of the right form of Projection, that Divine Work,

(when it is now brought to its Complement, and degree above perfection) ſhould be deſtroied. Therefore he muſt know, that upon whatſoever Body thou ſhalt firſt project the Medicine, it will change it into Duſt anſwerable to the nature of the Body on which thou didſt Project it, which indeed is Myſticall and to be wondered at; If therefore thou deſireſt to bring thy Elixir to the Sun, let thy firſt Proportion be made upon the Sun, that in the Sun it may be ſpecificated. And ſo with the Moon to the Moon, thou muſt thence proceed as hath been manifeſted clearly enough from the authority of moſt approved Philoſophers.

CHAP. X.

Multiplication.

Semita. EVery encreaſing or growing thing, both Vegetable and Animall, is multiplied in its kinde, as Men, Trees, Grain, and the like, for of one Seed, a thouſand are generated, therefore it is poſſible that things be infinitely encreaſt. *Semita Semitæ pa.*438.

Bacon. But thou ſhalt multiply the Medicine thus; After thou haſt compleated it, take notice on how many it fals, which being foreſeen, again reſolve, and congeal it, and in every Reſolution the Tincture is doubled, that if before its reſolution one part fall upon a hundred, afterwards it will fall upon two hundred. *Bacon fo.*19.

Scala. Medicine may be multiplied two ways, firſt by Diſſolution and Reiteration of Congelation, and this his is its virtuall Multiplication in Goodneſſe or Quality; the ſecond y Fermentation, and this is its Multiplication in Quantity. Scala 65.

Roſar. The Multiplication of Medi-ine is performed two ways, one y the reiterated Diſſolution and Coagulation of the Stone; the econd by Projection of the firſt Elixir Stone upon a Body, either White or Red, in ſuch a Quantity, hat the ſame Body may alſo be urned into Medicine, and then here may be put together to diſ-olve in their Water and menſtrous Matter, and ſo the firſt Elixir is the erment of ſuch a Tincture; and o doe Women that bake. *Roſar. hiloſophor.pa.*347.

Clangor. The Augmentation in Good-eſſe and Quality, is to diſſolve nd coagulate the very Tincture, hat is, to imbibe and exſiccate it our Mercury. Or thus, take one one part of the prepared Tincture, and diſſolve it in three parts of our Mercury, then put it in a Veſſell, and ſeal the Veſſell, and cover it with hot Embers, till it be exſiccated and become Duſt, then open the Veſſel, and again imbibe and exſiccate as before, and how much the oftner thou doſt this, ſo often ſhalt thou gain ſome parts. Or elſe take of the fixt Matter which tincteth, that is, of the prepared Tincture three parts, and of the Philoſophers Mercury one part, and put it into a Veſſel, and ſeal the Veſſel, and put it among hot Embers as before, and exſiccate it, that it may be made Duſt, then open the Veſſel, imbibe, and exſiccate it as before: And the Water that is Argent vive or Mercury, addes nothing to the Weight, or to the Body, unleſſe as much as remains of the Metallick humidity.

A ſo the vertue of it, is augment and multiplied in quantity, ſo th if thou haſt an hundred in the fi Work, in the ſecond thou ſh have a thouſand, in the third t thouſand, and ſo by proſecutin thy Projection will become in nite, in truly, perfectly, and fixe ly tincting or giving Tincture every Quantity, how great ſoev and ſo by a thing of no valu added, Colour, Weight, and V tue. *Arteph. fo.*37.

TH

THE COROLLARY.

I knew (ſaid Count Bernard of Trevisane) a certain man of the County of Anchona, who had very well known the Stone, but was inorant of the Multiplication, He (ſaith he) did ſolicitouſly follow me ſixteen intire years that he might learn, but from me he never knew it, for he hath the ſame books as I.

But I cannot think any man ſo dull and ſtupid, but that he may from this Chapter eaſily underſtand the Multiplication of the Stone. Such things by how much the oftner they are diſſolved, filtrated, and oagulated, become by ſo much the more ſubtile, pure, penetrating, and much more tranſparent. It is likewiſe ſo with that Phyſicall Stone, which, although it be brought to perfection, yet by how much the oftner ner it is diſſolved and coagulated, ſo much the more the ſtrength ther of is multiplied in Projection, evi untill it attain an infinite numbe

Things to be obſerved.

1. THE Materiall Part bein known, and had, it ough not to be kept in a Hot, and Moiſt but in a Cold or Dry place; nor b kept long: but thou beginneſt t Work with it whilſt it is freſh, an but newly Extracted from its Mine

2. Begin not to Work, unleſ thou haſt ſo much of the Prope Materiall weighed out, as will ſerv for two years; that in caſe thou faileſt the firſt time, thou maiſ correct it the ſecond. Becauſe thou canſt not examine Truth without Falſhood; nor that which is Streigh without conſideration had of tha which is Crooked. So that if thou ſhouldſt want Matter to work upon, thou leaveſt the Work unfiniſhed an

and getteſt nothing but thy Labour for thy Pains.

3. The Elements are to be ſeparated in a ſoft Bath, that the Alembick be not perceived to be hot, but that the vapour (being Elevated and Congealed in the Colder Aire) may be turned into Water, having the form of all the Species's whereof it is Generated.

4. After the Water ſhall be Diſtilled, let it not ſtand long when it is fit for Operation; Becauſe the Coagulum thereof falleth into the bottome, congealing the Coagulated (Body) by the Coldneſſe and Drineſſe of the Aire: which (ſaith Senior) happened to one of my Aſſociates, who found it ſo for a whole year, but not Diſtilled.

5. It is neceſſary the Artiſt have a great Quantity of Water, becauſe that in the Beginning, Middle, and End, there will always be a neceſsity thereof, as well in Putrefying, Waſhing, Calcining, Subliming, Imbibing, as that the Elixir may be often Reſolved. Wherefore Avicen in his Epiſtle to his Son, My Son it behoveth thee to have a great Quantity of our Sun and Moon, that thou maiſt extract their Moiſtures, ſixty Pounds at the leaſt.

6. Thou maiſt with on Pound weight of Water, reſolve the Matter into Water, even to an Infinite Quantity. But he that deſires to gather this firſt Pound let him be Patient, and proceed ſoftly and ſweetly, not haſtily: For that Work is termed of Philoſophers, An Extraction of his own Sweat.

7. But above all, thou muſt be ware, that at no time thou putteſt cold Glaſſe into the hot Water

le

leſt it ſhould be broke, and thou loſeſt thy Labour.

8. It is to be noted, When thou takeſt up a Veſſel, thou ſuffereſt it to coole with Water, for the ſpace of three hours, at the leaſt.

9. Take heed in Diſtillation, that the Water bubble not at the ſame ime.

10. In every Digeſtion, the Glaſſe muſt be Sealed with the Seal of Hermes.

11. To Fix Inceration, a Neceſity is obſerved amongſt Quacks, hat a Fire be made thereon, where-y the Matter may the better be Fix-d, which notwithſtanding is not o be ſleighted.

12. He that underſtands what s meant by the Philoſophers Manefia, underſtands the Preparation

and

and Perfection of the firſt Work, and what is meant by Sal naturæ, Sal Armoniacus, Mercurius Exuberatus, and Sulphur naturæ, which being underſtood

Dimidium facti, qui benè cœpit, habet.

13. Shortly after the ſecond Work, or the Philoſophick Work is begun, forget not even at the ſame houre, to begin the Preparation of thy Ferments, becauſe they require a long time of Preparation; Let the Sun make his own Ferment: the Moon hers.

14. To the Building of a Kings Palace, theſe following Artificers are neceſſarily required, A Maſon, a Smith, a Glaſier, a Potter, (or maker of Earthen Images) a Carpenter: without which, neither the Palace can rightly be built; nor the King there- therein preſerved from Cold, and the Injuries of Winds.

15. Many men through Ignorance have deſtroied their Work, when at the firſt they made Projection of the Medicine, upon Imperfect Metals. For, on whatſoever Body thou firſt of all Projecteſt the Medicine, that ſame is converted into a Frangible Maſſe, and ſhall be an Elixir according to the nature of the Body upon which it is ſo Projected. So, as that if the Projection be made upon Jupiter, or Venus, it ſhall be a Medicine, which not onely converteth other Imperfect Bodies into Jupiter, or Venus, but alſo reduceth Perfect Bodies (to wit, the Sun and Moon) into Imperfect Bodies; according to the nature of the Body upon which the Medicine ſhall firſt be Projected: Which cauſed the moſt Learned Raimund (ſtruck with Admiration) to cry out in theſe words, What ! is Nature Retrograde ?

16. He that would underſtand the ſayings of Philoſophers, muſt not give credit ſo much to their Words, as to the things they Treat of : For, the knowledge of Words, is not to be taken from the manner of ſpeaking; becauſe that the Matter is not ſubject to the Speech, but the Speech to the Matter.

17. Note, that a ſhort and broad veſſell is requiſite for diſtilling a Heavy Body, or at leaſt Water with its Saltneſſe. Becauſe that by how much the Water is more Ponderous then the Body, by ſo much ought the Veſſell to be the broader and deeper, through which the heat paſſeth more temperate and profitable to the Work.

18. Great care is always to be had, leſt at any time from the firſt

Conjunction to the Whiteneſſe, the Matter ſhould wax cold, or be at any time moved by reaſon of imminent Danger.

19. Let not a greater Quantity of the Matter be put into the Philoſophers Egge, then may fill two Thirds thereof, at the utmoſt.

20. It is to be noted, that in Ablution, or Calcination of the Earth, although the Waters Imbibition, or Exſiccation, be made in Preparation by the temperate heat of the Bath; yet its Sublimation or Riſing is perfected by a ſwift fire of Aſhes.

21. The Philoſophicall Work may be begun with an equall Proportion of Earth prepared, and pure Water ſeven times rectified; which are joined and put up in an Ovall Glaſſe Hermetically Sealed. Afterwards let them be placed in the Phi- loſophicall Furnace, or Athanore, and cheriſhed with a moſt ſoft Fire, whilſt the Earth drinks up her Water, and (according to Ripley) the Streams are dried up. Then laſtly, let the dry Matter be comforted with ſeven Imbibitions, and every Imbibition keep the following Proportion, that ſo the Water may by a juſt Meaſure exceed the Earth nine times according to the Doctrine of Philoſophers; which cannot otherwiſe be done, then by obſerving theſe Numbers. But this ſecret was never as yet Revealed by any Body.

For Example: If in the firſt Conjunction the Earth weigh 480 Grains, then let ſo many be added to it of its Water, which together make up 960 Grains, and for the time appointed to the firſt Imbibition 240 Grains of new Water are required, 300 to the ſecond, 375 to the third, 468 to the fourth, 585 to the fifth, 732 to the ſixth, 940 to the ſeventh, whereby the Imbibition is perfected; and then proceed to Fermentation.

To the Students in, and well affected unto HERMETICK Philoſophy, health and proſperity.

AMongſt the heights of hidden Philoſophy, the production of the Hermetick Stone hath of a long time been ſtrongly believed to e the chiefeſt, and neareſt a Miracle, oth for the Labyrinths and multitudes f operations, out of which the minde f man, unleſſe it be illuminated by a eam of Divine light, is not able to unwinde her ſelf; as alſo becauſe of its moſt noble end which promiſeth a conſtant plenty of health and fortunes, the wo main pillars of an happie life. Beſides, the chief Promoters of this Science have made it moſt remote from the knowledge of the vulgar ſort by their Tropes and dark expreſſions, and have placed it on high. as a Tower impregnable for Rocks and Situation, whereunto there can be no acceſſe, unleſſe God direct the way. The ſtudy of hiding thi Art hath drawn a reproach upon the At it ſelf and its Profeſſors : for when thoſ unfortunate Plunderers of the Golde Fleece by reaſon of their unskilfulneſſ felt themſelves,beat down from their vai attempt, and far unequall unto ſuch eminent perſons ; they in a furious raptur of deſperation,like mad-men, waxed ho againſt their fame and the renown of th Science, utterly denying any thing to b above their cognizance and the ſphear of their wit, but what was fooliſh an frothy : And becauſe they ſet upon buſineſſe of damage to themſelves, the have not ceaſed to accuſe the chief Maſters of hidden Philoſophy of falſhood Nature of impotency,and Art of cheat not for any other reaſon, then that the raſhly condemne what they know not nor is this condemnation a ſufficient revenge, without the addition of madneſ to ſnarl and bite the innocent with infamous ſlaunders. 3. The Science of producin Natures grand Secret, is a perfe knowledge of Nature univerſal and of Art, concerning the Real of Metals, the practiſe whereof converſant in finding the prin ples of Metals by Analyſis, and a ter they are made much mo perfect, to conjoyn them oth wiſe then before they have be that from thence may reſult a c tholick Medicine, moſt pow full to perfect imperfect Meta and for reſtoring ſick and deca Bodies, of what ſort ſoever.

4. Thoſe that are in publ Honours and Offices, or be ways buſied with private and ceſſary occupations, let them n ſtrive to attain unto the top of t Philoſophy, for it requireth the whole man, and being found, poſſeſſeth him, and being poſſeſſed, challengeth him from all long and ſerious imploiments, eſteeming all other things as ſtrange unto him, and of no value.

5. Let him that is deſirous of this Knowledge, clear his minde from all evil motions, eſpecially pride, which is abomination to Heaven, and the gate of Hell: let him be frequent in prayers, and charitable; have little to do with the world; abſtain from company keeping; enjoy conſtant tranquillity; that the Minde may be able to reaſon more freely in private, and be higher lifted up; for unleſſe it be kindled with a beam of Divine Light, it will not be able to penetrate the hidden myſteries of Truth.

6. The Alchymiſts, who have given their minds to their wel-nigh innumerable Sublimations, Diſtillations, Solutions, Congealations; to manifold Extraction of Spirits and Tinctures, and other Operations more ſubtill then profitable, and ſo have diſtracted them by variety of errors, as ſo many tormentors; will never be bent again by their own Genius to the plain way of Nature and light of Truth, from whence their induſtrious ſubtilty hath declined them, and by twinings and turnings, as by the Lybian Quickſands, hath drowned their intangled Wits: the onely hope of ſafety for them remaineth in finding out a faithfull Guide and Teacher, that may make the clear Sun conſpicuous unto them, and vindicate their eies from darkneſſe.

7. A ſtudious Tyro of a quick wit, conſtant minde, inflamed with the ſtudy of Philoſophy phy, very skilfull in naturall Philoſophy, of a pure heart, compleat in manners, mightily devoted to God, though ignorant of practicall Chymiſtry, may with confidence enter into the highway of Nature, peruſe the Books of beſt Philoſophers; let him ſeek out an ingenious and ſedulous Companion for himſelf, and not deſpair of obtaining his deſire.

8. Let a Student of this ſecret, carefully beware of reading or keeping company with falſe Philoſophers; for nothing is more dangerous to a learner of any Science, then the company of an unskilfull or deceitfull wit, by which falſe principles are ſtamped for true, whereby an honeſt and too credulous a minde is ſeaſoned with bad Doctrine.

9. Let a Lover of truth make uſe of a few Authors, but of beſt note and experienced truth; let him him ſuſpect things that are quickly underſtood, eſpecially in myſtical Names and ſecret Operations; for truth lies hid in obſcurity; nor doe Philoſophers ever write more deceitfully, then when plainly, nor ever more truly then when obſcurely.

10. As for the Authors of chiefeſt note, which have diſcourſed both acutely and truly of the ſecrets of Nature, and hidden Philoſophy, Hermes, and Morienus Romanus, amongſt the Ancients, in my judgement are of the higheſt eſteem: amongſt the Modern, Count Treviſanus, & Raimundus Lullius, is in greateſt reverence with me: for what that moſt acute Doctour hath omitted, none almoſt hath ſpoken: let him therefore peruſe him, yea let a Student often reade over his former Teſtament, and Codicil, and accept them as a Legacy of very great great worth. To theſe two Volumes let him adde both his Practicks, out of which Works all things deſirable may be collected, eſpecially the truth of Matter, the degrees of Fire, and the ordering of the Whole, wherein the whole Work is finiſhed, and thoſe things which our Anceſtors too carefully laboured to keep ſecret. The occult cauſes of things, and the ſecret motions of nature, are demonſtrated more clearly and faithfully. Concerning the firſt and myſticall Water of Philoſophers he hath ſet down few things, yet very pithy.

11. As for that clear Water ſought for by many, found out by few, yet obvious and profitable unto all, which is the Baſe of the Philoſophers Work, a noble Polonian not more famous for his learning then ſubtilty of wit (not named, whoſe name notwithwithſtanding a double Anagram hath betraied) In his Novum lumen Chymicum, Parabola and Ænigma, as alſo in his Tract of Sulphur, he hath ſpoken largely and freely enough; yea he hath expreſſed all things concerning it ſo plainly, that nothing can be ſatisfactory to him that deſireth more.

12. Philoſophers do uſually expreſſe themſelves more pithily in types and ænigmaticall figures (as by a mute kind of ſpeech) then by woprs; for example, Senior's Table, the allegorical Pictures of Roſarius the Schemes of Abraham Judæus in Flamellus: of the later ſort, the rare Emblemes of the moſt learned Michael Maiërus, wherein the myſteries of the Ancients are ſo fully opened, that as new Perſpectives they can preſent antiquated truth, and remote from our age as near unto our eies, and perfectly to be ſeen by us.

13. Whoſoever affirmeth that the Philoſophers grand Secret is above the ſtrength of Nature and Art, he is blinde, becauſe he knows not the Sun and Moon.

14. As for the Matter of their hidden Stone, Philoſophers have writ diverſly; ſo that very many diſagreeing in Words, do nevertheleſſe very well conſent in the Thing; nor doth their different ſpeech, argue the ſcience ambiguous or falſe, ſince the ſame thing may be expreſſed with many tongues, divers expreſſions, and a different character, and alſo one and many things may be ſpoken after a divers manner.

Of the Matter of the Stone.

15. Let the ſtudious Reader have a care of the manifold ſignifications of words, for by deceitfull windings, and doubtfull, yea contrary ſpeeches, (as it ſhould ſeem) Philoſophers vent their myſteries, with a deſire of keeping

ing in and hiding, not of ſophiſticating or deſtroying the truth: And though their writings abound with ambiguous and equivocall words; yet about none doe they more contend, then in hiding their golden branch:

16. Whoſoever ſeeketh the Art of perfecting and multiplying imperfect Metals, beyond the nature of Metals, goes in errour, for from Metals the Metals is to be derived, even as from Man, Mankinde; and from an Oxe, that ſpecies is to be fetcht.

17. Metals (we muſt confeſſe) cannot be multiplied by the inſtinct and labour of Nature onely; yet we may affirm that the multiplying virtue is hid in their profundity, and manifeſteth it ſelf by the help of Art: In this Work, Nature ſtandeth in need of the aid of Art; and both doth perfect the whole.

18. Perfect Bodies are endued with a more perfect ſeed: and therefore under the hard bark of perfect Metals the perfect ſeed lies hid, which he that knows to take out by the Philoſophers ſolution, hath entred into the high way, for

In Gold the ſeeds of Gold do lie, Though buried in Obſcurity.

19. Moſt Philoſophers have affirmed that their Kingly Work is wholly compoſed of the Sun and Moon; others have thought good to adde Mercury to the Sun: ſome have choſen Sulphur and Mercury; others have attributed no ſmall part in ſo great a Work to ſalt mingled with the other two. The very ſame men have profeſſed that this clear Stone is made of one thing onely, ſometimes of two, otherwhiles of three, at other times of four, and of five; and thus though writing ſo variouſly upon the ſame ſubject, doe neverthleſſe agree in ſenſe and meaning.

20. Now that (abandoning all Cheats) heats)we may deal candidly and ruly, we hold that this entire Vork is perfected by two Bodies nely, to wit, the Sun and Moon ightly prepared, for this is meer eneration which is by nature, vith the help of Art, wherein the opulation of male and female loth intercede, from whence an ff-ſpring far more noble then the arents, is brought forth.

21. Now thoſe Bodies muſt e taken, which are of an unſpot-ed and incorrupt virginity; ſuch s have life and ſpirits in them; ot extinct as thoſe that are hand-ed of the vulgar, for who can ex-ect life from dead things; and hoſe are called corrupt which ave ſuffered copulation; thoſe lead and extinct which (by the nforcements of the chief Tyrant f the world) have poured out heir ſoul with their bloud by Martyrdome, fly a fratricide from from whom the greateſt imminent danger in the whole Work is threatned.

22. The Sun is Maſculine, forasmuch as it ſendeth forth active and inforcing ſeed, the Moon is Feminine, called the matrix and veſſel of Nature, becauſe ſhe receiveth the ſeed of the male in her womb, and foſtereth it by her monthly proviſion yet doth it not altogether want its active virtue; for, firſt of all (being raviſhed with love) ſhe climbs up unto the male, untill ſhe hath wreſted from him the utmoſt delights of Venus, and fruitfull ſeed: nor doth ſhe deſiſt from her embraces, till that being great with childe, ſhe ſlip gently away.

23. By the name of the Moon Philoſophers underſtand not the vulgar Moon, which alſo is maſculine in its operation, and in copulation acts the part of a male.

Let none therefore preſume to try the wicked and unnaturall conjunction of two males, neither let him conceive any hope of iſſue from ſuch copulation, but he ſhall join Gabertius to Beia, and ffer the ſiſter to her own brother n firm Matrimony, that from hence he may receive Sol's noble Son.

24. They that hold Sulphur nd Mercury to be the Matter of he Stone, by the name of Sulhur, they underſtand the Sun nd common Moon; by Mercuy the Philoſophers Moon: ſo without diſſimulation) holy Lulus adviſeth his friend, that he atmpt not to work without Merry and Luna for Silver, and ercury and Sol for Gold.

Cap.62. Prioris Teſtam.

25. Let none therefore be deived by adding a third to two: r Love admitteth not a third; d wedlock is terminated in the number of two; love further extended is adultery, not matrimony.

26. Nevertheleſſe, Spirituall love polluteth not a virgin, Beia might therefore without crime (before her promiſe made to Gabritius) have contracted ſpirituall love, to the end that ſhe might thereby be made more cheerfull, more pure, and fitter for the buſineſſe of matrimony.

27. Procreation of children is the end of lawfull Wedlock Now that the Infant may bee borne more vigorous and gallant, let both the combatants be clenſed from every ſcab and ſpot, before they both go up to their marriage bed, and let nothing unneceſſary cleave unto them; becauſe from pure ſeed comes a purifyed generation, and ſo the chaſt wedlock of Sol and Luna ſhall be finiſhed when they ſhall enter into Love

bed-chamber, and be conjoyned, and ſhe ſhall receive a ſoul from her husband by imbracing him; from this copulation a moſt potent King ſhall ariſe, whoſe father will bee Sol, and his mother Luna.

28. He that ſeeks for a phyſicall tincture without Sol and Luna, loſeth both his coſt and pains: for the Sun affordeth a moſt plentifull tincture of redneſſe, and he Moon of whiteneſſe, for theſe wo are onely called perfect; becauſe they are filled with the ſubtance of pureſt Sulphur, perfecty clarified by the skill of nature: Let thy Mercury therefore have ts tincture from both of theſe Lights; for things muſt of neceſity receive a tincture before they an give one.

29. Perfect metals containe in hem two things, which they are ble to communicate to the imperfect, Tincture and Fixation;for thoſe, becauſe the are dyed and fixed with pure Sulphur, to wit, both white and red, they doe therefore perfectly tinct and fix, if they be fitly prepared with their proper Sulphur and Arſenick, otherwiſe they have not ſtrength of multiplying their tincture.

30. Mercury is for imperfect metals, fit only to receive the tincture of the Sun and Moon in the work of the Philoſophers Stone, that being full of tincture, it may give forth other things in aboundance : yet ought it (before that) to be full of inviſible Suphur, that it may be the more coloured with the viſible tincture of perfect bodies, and ſo repay it with ſufficient Uſury.

31. Now the whole tribe of Philoſophers ſweat much, and are mightily troubled to extract tincture out of gold : for they beleeve eeve that tincture can be ſepara-ed from the Sun, and being ſearated encreaſe in virtue; but made liquid or diſſolved by force. For the tincture followeth its body, and is never ſeparated from it. That is the deluding of Art, unknowne to Artificers themſelves.

32. Nevertheleſſe it may be granted, that tincture is ſeparable from its body, yet (we muſt confeſſe) it cannot be ſeparated without the corruption of the tincture: when as Artiſts offer violence to the gold, or Aqua fortis rather corroding then diſſolving. The body therefore ſpoiled of its tincture and golden fleece, muſt needs grow baſe, and as an unprofitable heap turne to the damage of its Artificer, and the tincture thus corrupted to have a weaker operation.

33. Let them in the next place caſt their tincture into Mercury, or into any other imperfect body and as ſtrongly conjoyne both of hem as their Art will permit; yet hall they fail of their hopes two vayes; Firſt, becauſe the tincture vill neither penetrate nor colour eyond Natures ſtrength; and herefore no gaine will accrue rom thence to recompence the xpence and countervaile the loſſe f the body ſpoiled and of no value, ſo

34. Let them therefore that e. deſirous of Chymiſtry, and ave hitherto followed Impoors and Mountebanks, ſound a retrait, ſpare time and coſt, and give their minde to a work truly Philoſophicall, leſt the Phrygians be wiſe too late, and at length Oſey.7. be compelled to cry out with the Prophet, Strangers have eaten up my ſtrength.

35. In the Philoſophers work more toyle and time then coſt is expended; for he that hath convenient matter, need be at little expence: beſides, thoſe that hunt after great ſtore of mony, and place their chief end in wealth, they truſt more to their riches, then their own art. Let therefore the too credulous Freſh-man beware of theſe pilfering pick-pockets, for whilſt they promiſe golden mountains, they lay in wait for gold; they demand bright uſhering Sol, (viz. mony before hand) becauſe they walk in darkneſſe.

with ſo many windings and Menders, involved it with ſo many quivocall names, that it may be ooner met with by the force of 37. That Philoſophers might he deeper drown their Mercury in arkneſſe, they have made it ma-ifold , and placed their Mercury yet diverſly) in every part and orefront of their worke , nor will he attaine unto a perfect knowledge thereof, who ſhall be ignorant of any part of the work.

38. Philoſophers have acknowledged a threefold Mercury eſpecially, to wit, after abſolute preparation of the firſt degree, and Philoſophicall ſublimation; for then they call it their Mercury, and Mercury ſublimated.

39. Againe, in the ſecond preparation, that which by Authors is ſtiled the Firſt (becauſe they omit the Firſt) Sol being now made crude again, and reſolved into his firſt matter is Mercury, properly called of ſuch like bodies, or the Philoſophers Mercury; then the matter is called Rebis, Chaos, the whole world, wherein are all things neceſſary to the work, becauſe that onely is ſufficient to perfect the Stone.

40. Laſtly the Philoſophers do ſometimes call perfect Elixir and colouring medicine, their Mercury, though improperly; for he name of Mercury doth onely properly agree with that which is volatile; beſides that which is ſublimated in every region of the work, they call Mercury: but Elixir becauſe it is moſt fixed, cannot have the ſimple name of Mercury, and therefore they have ſtiled it their own Mercury, to difference it from that volatile. A ſtraight way is onely laid downe for them to find out and diſcerne ſo many Mercuries of the Philoſophers; for then onely

41. Elixir is called the Philoſophers ſophers Mercury for the likeneſſe and great conformity it hath with Heavenly Mercury; for this, being void of elementary qualities is beleeved moſt propenſe to receive influence from them, and that changeable Proteus puts on and encreaſeth the genius and nature of other Planets, by reaſon of oppoſition, conjunction and aſpect. The like this uncertaine Elixir worketh, for that being tyed to no proper quality, it imbraceth the quality and diſpoſition of the thing wherewith it is mixed, and wonderfully multiplyeth the virtues and qualities hereof.

The Philoſophical ſublimation of Mercury.

42. In the Philoſophicall ſublimation or firſt preparation of Mercury, Herculean labour muſt be undergone by the work-man; for Jaſon had in vaine attempted his expedition to Colches without Alcides.

44. He that calleth the Philoſophers Luna or their Mercury, the common Mercury; doth wittingly deceive, or is deceived; ſo the writings of * Geber teach us, that the Philoſophers Mercury is Argent vive, yet not of the common ſort, but extracted out of it by the Philoſophers skill.

* Chap. 4. pari. lib. 1 perfecti. Magiſterii.

45. That the Philoſophers Mercury is not Argent vive in its proper nature, nor in its whole ſubſtance, but the midle and pure ſubſtance thereof, which thence hath taken its originall and made by it, the grand Philoſophers opinions being founded in experience.

46. The Philoſophers Mercury hath divers names; ſometimes it is call'd Earth, ſometimes Water in a divers reſpect, becauſe it natually ariſeth from them both. The arth is ſubtle, white, ſulphurous, n which the elements are fixed & eparate therefore the clean from he unclean, the ſubſtance from he accidents, and make that which is

is hid, manifeſt, by the courſe of nature, otherwiſe make no further progreſſe, for this is the foundation of the whole worke, and nature.

48. That dry and moſt precious liquor doth conſtitute the radicall moiſture of metals, wherefore of ſome of the ancients it is called Glaſſe; for glaſſe is extracted out of the radicall moiſture, cloſely lurking in aſhes which will not give place, unleſſe it be to the hotteſt flame; notwithſtanding our inmoſt or centrall Mercury diſcovers it ſelfe by the moſt gentle and kindly (though a little more tedious) fire of nature.

49. Some have ſought for the latent Philoſophicall earth by Calcination, others by ſublimation; many among the glaſing veſſels, and ſome few between vitrial and ſalt, even as among their naturall veſſels: others enjoyne to ſublime

50. Argent vive is ſo defiled by originall ſin, that it floweth with a double infection; the firſt it hath contracted from the polluted Earth, which hath mixed it ſelfe therewith in its generation, and by congelation hath cleaved thereunto: the ſecond borders upon the dropſie, and is the corruption of intercutal Water, proceeding from thick and impure water, mixed with the clear, which nature is not able to ſqueeze out and ſeparate by conſtriction; and becauſe it is extrinſecall, it goes away with a gentle heat. The Mercuries leproſie infeſting the body, is not of its root and ſubſtance, bu accidentall, and therfore ſeparabl from it; the earthy part is wipec off by a moiſt Bath and the lave of nature: the watery part is take away by a dry bath with the plea ſant fire of generation. And thu by a threefold waſhing and clen

ing the Dragon putting off his old ſcales & ugly ſkin is renewed.

51. The Philoſophicall ſublimation of Mercury is compleated in two things; namely by removing things ſuperfluous from it, nd by introducing things wanting : the ſuperfluities are the ex-ernall accidents; which in the ark ſpheare of Saturne doe make loudy ruddy Jupiter. Separate herefore the blewneſſe of Saturn oming up, untill Iupiters purple ar ſmile upon thee. Add hereunto he ſulphur of nature, whoſe grain nd leaven it hath in it ſelfe, ſo uch as ſufficeth it; but ſee that be ſufficient for other things al-. Multiply therefore that invi-ble Sulphur of the philoſophers ntil the Virgins milk come forth: d ſo the firſt gate is opened un- thee.

52. The entrance of the Phi-ſophers garden is kept by the Heſperian Dragon, which being laid open, a fountaine of the clear-eſt water proceeding from a ſeaven-fold ſpring floweth forth on every ſide the threſhold, wherein make the Dragon drink thrice the magicall number of Seven, until being drunk he put off his hideous garment: may the divine powers of light-bringing Venus and horned Diana, be propitious unto thee.

53. Three kinds of moſt beautifull flowers are to be ſought, and may be found in the garden of the wiſe: Damask-coloured Violets, the milk-white Lilly, and the purple and immortall flower of love Amaranthus. Not far from tha fountaine at the entrance, freſ Violets do firſt ſalute thee, whic being watered by ſtreams from th great golden river, put on the moſ delicate colour of the dark Saphi the Sun will give thee ſigns. 54. Philoſophers have their a alſo, wherein ſmall fiſhes , fat d ſhining with ſilver ſcales, are nerated ; which he that ſhall ch in and take out of a ſmal and e net , ſhall be accounted a ſt expert fiſher.

55. The Philoſophers Stone is l flowes from everlaſting ooks ; thoſe mountaines are of er , and the brooks of gold :

m thence gold and ſilver , and the treaſure of Kings are pro-ed.

56. Whoſoever is minded to obtaine the Philoſophers Stone, let him reſolve to take a long peregrination, for it is neceſſary that he go to ſee both the Indies, that from thence he may bring the moſt precious gems and the pureſt gold.

57. Philoſophers extract this their Stone out of ſeven ſtones, the two chiefe whereof are of a divers nature and efficacy, the one infuſeth inviſible Sulphur, the other ſpirituall Mercury; that bringeth heat and drineſſe, and this cold and moiſture: thus by their help, the ſtrength of the elements is multiplyed in the Stone the former is found in the Eaſtern coaſt, the latter in the Weſterne both of them have the power o colouring and multiplying, and unleſſe the Stone ſhal take its firſ tincture from them, it will neithe colour nor multiply.

ſleep, and a dropſie occaſioned by a foule ſtomack, ſhe ſhall be changed by a wonderfull metamorphoſis into a cole-black Crow, which ſhall begin to fly with wings ſtretched out, and by its flight ſhall whisk downe water from the clouds, untill being often moiſtned, he put off his wings of his owne accord, and falling downe againe it be changed into a moſt white Swan. Thoſe that are ignorant of the cauſes of things, may wonder with aſtoniſhment, when they conſider that the World is nothing but a continuall Metamorphoſis, they may marvel that the ſeeds of things perfectly digeſted ſhould end in greateſt whiteneſſe. Let the Philoſopher imitate Nature in his work.

The middle and extreames of the Stone.

60. Nature proceedeth thus in making and perfecting her works, that from an inchoate generaneration it may bring a thing by diverſe meanes as it were by degrees, to the ultimate terme of perfection: ſhe therefore attaineth her end by little and little, not by leaps; confining and including her work between two extreams, diſtinct and ſevered as by ſpaces. The practice of Philoſophy, which is the Ape of Nature, ought not to decline from the way and example of Nature in its working and direction to finde out its happy ſtone, for whatſoever is without the bounds of Nature, is either an errour or neareſt one.

61. The extreams of the Stone are naturall Argent vive, and perfect Elixir: the middle parts which lye between, by helpe whereof the work goes on, are of three ſorts; for they either belong unto matter, or operations or demonſtrative ſignes: the whole work is perfected by theſe extreams and means.

62. The Materiall meaus.

62. The materiall means of the Stone are of divers kinds; for ſome are extracted out of others ſucceſſively: The firſt are Mercury Philoſophically ſublimated, and perfect metals, which although they be extream in the work of nature, yet in the Philoſophicall worke they ſupply the place of meanes: of the former the ſeconds are produced; namely, the four elements, which againe are circulated and fixed: of the ſeconds the thirds are produced, to wit, either Sulphur, the multiplication whereof doth terminate the firſt worke: the fourth and laſt meanes are leaven or ointments weighed with the mixtion of the things aforeſaid, ſucceſſively produced in the worke of the Elixir: By the right ordering of the things aforeſaid, the perfect Elixir is finiſhed, which is the laſt term of the whole work, wherein the Philoſophers Stone rereſteth as in its centre, the multiplication whereof is nothing elſe then a ſhort repetition of the premiſed operations.

Operative means. 63. The operative meanes (which are alſo called the Keys of the work) are foure: The firſt is Solution or Liquefaction; the ſecond is Ablution; the third, Reduction; the fourth, Fixation. By Liquefaction bodies returne into their ancient matter, things concocted are made raw againe, and the copulation between the male and female is effected, from whence the Crow is generated: Laſtly the Stone is divided into 4 confuſed elements, which happeneth by the retrogradation of the Luminaries. The Ablution teacheth to make the Crow white, & to create Jupiter of Saturn, which is made by the converſion of the body into Spirit. The office of Reduction is to reſtore the ſoule to the Stone examinated, and to nouriſh it with dew and ſpirituall Milk, untill it ſhall attaine unto perfect ſtrength: In both theſe latter operations the Dragon rageth againſt himſelfe, and by devouring his tayle, doth wholly exhauſt himſelfe, and at length is turned into the Stone. Laſtly, the operation of the Fixation fixeth both Sulphurs upon their fixed body, by the mediation of the ſpirits tincture; it decocteth the leavens by degrees, ripeneth things raw, and ſweetneth the bitter; In fine, by penetrating and tincturing the flowing Elixir, generateth, perfecteth; and laſtly, riſeth up to the height of ſublimity.

The demonſtrative meanes.

64. The Meanes or demonſtrative ſigns are Colours, ſucceſſively and orderly affecting the matter and its affections and demonſtrative paſſions, whereof there are three ſpeciall ones (as criticall critall)to be noted, to theſe ſome adde a Fourth. The firſt is black, which is called the Crowes-head, becauſe of its extreame blackneſſe, whoſe gleam crepuſculum ſheweth the beginning of the fires action of nature and ſolution, and the blackeſt night the perfection of liquefaction, and confuſion of the elements. Then the graine putrefies & is corrupted, that it may be the more apt for generation. The white colour ſucceedeth the black, wherein is given the perfection of the firſt degree, and of white Sulphur. This is called the bleſſed ſtone: this Earth is white and foliated, whererein Philoſophers doe ſow their gold. The third is Orange colour, which is produced in the paſſage of the white to the red, as the middle and mixt of both, and is as the morning with her ſafron-haire a fore-runner of the Sun. The fourth colour is ruddy and ſanguine, which is extracted from the white fire onely: Now becauſe whiteneſſe is eaſily altered by any other colour, before day it quickly faileth of its candor. But the dark redneſſe of the Sun perfecteth the worke of Sulphur, which is called the Sperme of the male, the fire of the Stone, the Kings Crown, and the ſon of Sol, wherein the firſt labour of the workman reſteth.

65. Beſides theſe decretory ſignes which firmely inhere in the matter, and ſhew its eſſentiall mutations, almoſt infinite colours appear, and ſhew themſelves in vapours, as the Rain-bow in the clouds, which quickly paſſe away and are expelled by thoſe that ſucceed, more affecting the aire then the earth: the operatour muſt have a gentle care of them, becauſe they are not permanent, and proceed not from the intrinſecall diſpoſition of the matter, but from the fire painting and faſhioning every thing after its pleaſure, or caſually by heat in ſmall moiſture.

66. Of the ſtrange colours, ſome called out of time, give an ill omen to the work, as the Blackneſſe renewed: for the Crowes young ones having once left their neſt are never to be ſuffered to returne. Too haſty Redneſſe; for this once and in the end onely gives a certaine hope of the harveſt; if before it make the matter red, it is an argument of the greateſt aridity, not without great danger, which can onely be averted by Heaven alone, forthwith beſtowing a ſhower upon it.

Foure Digeſtions of the Stone.

67. The Stone is exalted by ſucceſſive digeſtions, as by degrees, and at length attaineth to perfection. Now foure Digeſtions agreeable to the foure aboveſaid Operations or Governments do compleat the whole worke, the author whereof is the fire, which makes their difference.

Firſt. 68. The firſt digeſtion operateth the ſolution of the Body, whereby comes the firſt conjunction of male and female, the commixtion of both ſeeds, putrefaction, the reſolution of the elements into homogeneall water; the eclipſe of the Sun and Moon in the head of the Dragon, and laſtly it bringeth back the whole World into its ancient Chaos, and dark abyſſe. This firſt digeſtion is made as in the ſtomack, of a melon colour and weak, more fit for corruption then generation.

Second. 69. In the ſecond digeſtion the ſpirit of the Lord walketh upon the waters; the light begins to appear, and a ſeparation of waters from the waters; the Sun and Moon

Moon are renewed; the elements are extracted out of the chaos, that being perfectly mixt in Spirit they may conſtitute a new world;
a new Heaven and new Earth are made; and laſtly, all bodies are become ſpirituall. The Crowes young ones changing their fethers begin to paſſe into Doves, the Eagle and Lion embrace one ano-her with an eternall League. And his generation of the World is nade by the fiery Spirit deſcendng in the forme of Water, and iping away Originall ſin; for the hiloſophers Water is Fire, which moved by the exciting heat of a ath. But ſee that the ſeparation f Waters be done in Weight and leaſure, leſt thoſe things that maine under Heaven be drown-l under the Earth, or thoſe ings that are ſnatched up above eaven be too much deſtitute of dity.

Third. 70. The third digeſtion of the newly generated Earth drinketh up the dewy Milk, and all the ſpirituall virtues of the quinteſſence, and faſteneth the quickning Soul to the Body by the Spirits mediation. Then the Earth layeth up a great Treaſure in it ſelfe, and is made, like the coruſcant Moon, afterwards to ruddy Sun; the former is called the Earth of the Moon, the latter the Earth of the Sun; for both of them is begot of the copulation of them both; neither of them any longer feareth the pains of the Fire, because both want all ſpots; for they have been often clenſed from ſin by fire, and have ſuffered great Martyrdome, until all the Elements are turned down wards.

Fourth. 71. The Fourth digeſtion conſummateth all the Myſteries of the World, and the Earth being turned into moſt excellent leaven, it leaveneth all imperfect bodies becauſe it hath before paſſed into the heavenly nature of quinteſſence. The vertue thereof flowing from the Spirit of the Univerſe is a preſent Panacea and univerſall medicine for all the diſeaſes of all creatures, the digeſtions of the firſt worke being repeated will open to thee the Philoſophers ſecret Furnace. Be right in thy works, that thou mayeſt finde God favourable, otherwiſe the plowing of the Earth will be in vaine; Nor

72. The whole Progreſſe of the Philoſophers work is nothing but Solution and Congelation; the Solution of the body, and Congelation of the Spirit; nevertheleſſe, there is but one operation of both: the fixed and volatile are perfectly mixed and united in the Spirit, which cannot be done, unleſſe the fixed body be firſt made ſoluble and volatile: By reduction is the volatile body fixed into a permanent body, and volatile nature doth at laſt change into a fixed one, as the fixed Nature had before paſſed into volatile. Now ſo long as the Natures were confuſed in the Spirit, that mixed Spirit keeps a middle Nature between Body and Spirit, Fixed and Volatile.

73. The generation of the Stone is made after the patterne of the Creation of the World; for it is neceſſary, that it have its Chaos and Firſt matter, wherein the confuſed Elements do fluctuate, untill they be ſeparated by the fiery Spirit; they being ſeparated, the light Elements are carried upwards, and the heavie ones downwards: the light ariſing, darkneſſe retraits: the waters are gathered into one, and the dry land appeares. At length the two great Luminaries ariſe, and minerall virtues vegetable and animal, are produced in the Philoſophers Earth.

74. God created Adam of the mud of the Earth, wherein were nherent the virtues of all the Elements, of the Earth & Water eſpecially, which doe more conſtitute the ſenſible and corporeall heap: Into this Maſſe God inſpired the breath of Life, and enlivened it with the Sunne of the Holy Spirit. He gave Eve for a Wife to Adam, and bleſſing them he gave unto them a Precept and Faculty of multiplying. The Generation of the Philoſophers Stone, is not unlike the Creation of Adam, for the Mud was made of a terreſtriall and ponderous Body diſſolved by Water, which deſerved the excellent name of Terra Adamica, wherein all the virtues and qualities of the Elements are placed. At length the heavenly Soule is infuſed thereinto by the Spirit of the quinteſſe and Solar influx, and by the Benediction and Dew of Heaven; the virtue of multiplying in infinitum by the intervening copulation of both ſexes is given it.

75. The chief ſecret of this worke conſiſteth in the manner of working, which is wholly imployed about the Elements: for the matter of the Stone paſſeth from one Nature into another, the Elements are ſucceſſively extracted, and and by turnes obtaine dominion; every thing is agitated by the circles of humidum and ſiccum, untill all things be turned downwards, and there reſt.

76. In the work of the Stone the other Elements are circulated in the figure of Water, for the Earth is reſolved into Water, wherein are the reſt of the Elements; the Water is Sublimated into Vapour, Vapour retreats into Water, and ſo by an unwearied circle, is the Water moved, untill it abide fixed downwards; now that being fixed all the Elements are fixed: Thus into it they are reſolved, by it they are extracted, with it they live and dye: the Earth is the Tombe, and laſt end of them all.

77. The order of Nature requireth that every generation begin from humidum and in humidum. In the Philoſophers work, Nature is to be reduced into order, that ſo the matter of the Stone which is terreſtriall, compact and dry, in the firſt place may be diſſolved and flow into the Element of Water next unto it, and then Saturne will be generated of Sol.

78. The Aire ſucceeds the Water drawne about by ſeven circles or revolutions, which is wheel'd about with ſo many circles and reductions, untill it be fixed downwards, and Saturne being expell'd, Jupiter may receive the Scepter and Government of the Kingdome, by whoſe coming the Philoſophers Infant is formed, nouriſhed in the wombe, and at length is borne; reſembling the ſplendor of Luna in its beautifull ſerene countenance.

79. The Fire executing the courſes of the Nature of the Elements; extream Fire promoving it, of hidden is made manifeſt: the Saffron dyeth lyeth the Lilly:redneſſe poſſeſſeth he cheeks of the whitening Child ow made ſtronger: A Crowne s prepared for him againſt the ime of his Reigne. This is the onſummation of the firſt work, nd the perfect rotation of the lements, the ſigne whereof is, hen they are all terminated in iccum, and the body void of pirit lyeth downe wanting pulſe id motion: And thus all the Ements do finally acquieſce in erra.

80. Fire placed in the Stone is latures Prince, Sol's Son and icar, moving and digeſting mat-r,and perfecting all things there-, if it ſhall attain its liberty; for lieth weak under an hard bark, ocure therefore its freedome hat it may ſecure thee freely; ut beware that thou urge it not ove meaſure,for it being impatint of Tyranny it becomes a fugitive

tive, no hope of returne being left unto thee; call it back therefore by courteous flattery, and keep it prudently.

81. The firſt mover of Nature is Externall Fire, the Moderator of Internall Fire, and of the whole work; Let the Philoſopher therefore very well underſtand the government thereof, and obſerve its degrees and points; for from thence the welfare or ruine of the worke dependeth. Thus Art helpeth Nature, and the Philoſopher is the Miniſter of both.

82. By theſe two Inſtruments of Art and Nature, the Stone lifteth it ſelfe up from Earth to Heaven with great ingenuity, and ſlideth from Heaven to Earth, becauſe the Earth is its Nurſe, and being carried in the wombe of the wind, it receiveth the force of the Superiours and Inferiours.

83. The Circulation of the Elements

lements is exerciſed with a double Wheel, by the greater or extended, and the leſſe or contracted: The Wheel extended fixeth all the Elements of the Earth, and its circle is not finiſhed unleſſe the work of Sulphur be perfected. The revolution of the minor Wheel is terminated by the extraction and preparation of every Element; Now in this Wheel there are three Circles placed, which alwayes and variouſly move the Matter, by an Erratick and Intricate Motion, and do often (ſeven times at leaſt) drive about every Element, in order ſucceeding one another, and ſo agreeable, that if one ſhall be wanting the labour of the reſt is made void. Theſe are Natures Inſtruments, wherby the Elements are prepared. Let the Philoſopher therfore conſider the progreſſe of Nature in the Phyſicall Tract more fully deſcribed for this very end.

The two-fold wheel, the great and the leſs.

3 Circles.

84. Eve-

84. Every Circle hath its proper Motion, for all the motions of the Circles are converſant about the Subject of Humidum and Siccum, and are ſo concatenated, that they produce the onely operation, and one only concent of Nature: two of them are oppoſite, both in reſpect of the cauſes & the effects; for one moveth upwards, drying by heat; another downwards, moiſtning by cold; a third carrying the form of reſt and ſleep by digeſting, induceth the ceſſation of both in greateſt moderation.

First Circle 85. Of the three Circles, the Firſt is Evacuation, the labour of which is in ſubſtracting the ſuperfluous Humidum, and alſo in ſeparating the pure, cleane, and ſubtile, ftom the groſſe and terreſtriall dreggs. Now the greateſt danger is found in the motion of this Circle, becauſe it hath to doe with things Spirituall, and makes Nature plentifull. 86. Two

86. Two things are chiefly to be taken heed of in moving this Circle; Firſt, that it be not moved too intenſly; the other, that it be not moved longer then is meet. Motion accelerated raiſeth confuſion in the matter, ſo that the groſſe, impure and indigeſted part may fly out together with the pure and ſubtile, and the Body undiſſolved mixed with the Spirit, together with that which is diſſolved. with this precipitated motion the Heavenly and Terreſtriall Nature are confounded, and the Spirit of the Quinteſſence corrupted by the admixtion of the Earth, is made dull and invalid. By too long a motion the Earth is too much evacuated of its Spirit, & is made ſo languiſhing, dry, and deſtitute of Spirit, that it cannot eaſily be reſtored and recalled to its Temperament. Either errour burneth up the Tinctures, or turns it into flight.

87. The

Second Circle. 87. The Second Circle is Reſtauration; whoſe office is, to reſtore ſtrength to the gaſping and debilitated body by Potion. The former Circle was the Organ of Sweat and labour, but this of Refreſhment and Conſolation. The action of this is imployed in the grinding & mollifying the Earth, (Potter like) that it may be the better mixed.

88. The motion of this Circle muſt be lighter then that of the former, eſpecially in the beginning of its Revolution, leſt the Crow's young ones be drowned in their neſt by a large floud, and the growing world be overflowne by a deluge. This is the Weigher and Aſſayer of Meaſures, for it diſtributeth Water by Geometricall Precepts. There is uſually no greater Secret found in the whole practice of the Worke, then the firme and juſtly uſtly weighed Motion of this Circle; for it informeth the Philoſophers Infant and inſpireth Soul and Life into him.

89. The Lawes of this Circles Motions are, that it run about gently; and by little and little, and ſparingly let forth it ſelfe, leſt that by making haſt it fall from its meaſure, and the Fire inherent overwhelmed with the Waters, the Architect of the Work grow dull, or alſo be extinguiſhed: that meat and drink be adminiſtred by turnes, to the end there may be a better Digeſtion made, and the beſt temperament of Humidum and Siccum; for the indiſſoluble colligation of them both is the End and Scope of the Worke. Furthermore ſee, that you add ſo much by Watering, as ſhall be wanting in aſſation, that Reſtauration may reſtore ſo much of the loſt ſtrength by

corroborating; as Evacuatio hath taken away by debilitating.

Third circle.

90. Digeſtion the laſt Circl acteth with ſilent and inſenſibl motion; and therefore it is ſai by Philoſophers, that it is made i a ſecret furnace; it decocteth th Nutriment received, and converteth it into the Homogeneal parts of the body Moreover, it is called Putrefaction; becauſe as meat is corrupted in the Stomack before it paſſe into Bloud and Similar parts: ſo this operation breaketh the Aliment with a concocting and Stomack heat, and in a manner makes it to putrefie, that it may be the better Fixed, and changed from a Mercuriall into a Sulphurous Nature. Again, it is called Inhumation, becauſe by it the Spirit is inhumated, and as a dead man buried in the ground. But becauſe it goes moſt ſlowly, it therefore needeth a longer time.

The

The two former Circles do labour eſpecially in diſſolving, this in congealing, although all of them work both.

91. The Lawes of this Circle are; that it be moved by the Feaveriſh and moſt gentle heat of Dung, leſt that the things volatile fly out, and the Spirit be troubled at the time of its ſtricteſt Conjunction with the Body, for then the buſineſſe is perfected in the greateſt tranquillity and eaſe; therefore we muſt eſpecially beware leſt the Earth be moved by any Winds or Shewers: Laſtly, as this third Circle may alwayes ſucceed the ſecond ſtraight-wayes and in its order, as the ſecond it the firſt: ſo by interrupted works & by courſe thoſe three erratick Circles do compleat one intire circulaton, which often reiterated, at length turnes all things into Earth, and makes peace between enemies.

92. Na-

The Fire of Nature and Art.

92. Nature uſeth Fire, ſo alſo doth Art after its example, as an Inſtrument and Mallet in cutting out its works. In both operations therefore Fire is Maſter and Perfect. Wherefore the knowledge of Fires is moſt neceſſary for a Philoſopher, without which as another Ixion (condemn'd to labour in vaine) he ſhall turne about Wheel of Nature to no purpoſe.

93. The name Fire is Equivocall amongſt Philoſophers; for ſometimes it is uſed Metonymically for heat; and ſo, as many fires as heats. In the Generation of Metals and Vegetables, Nature acknowledgeth a three-fold Fire; to wit, Celeſtiall, Terreſtriall, and Innate. The Firſt flowes from Sol as its Fountaine, into the Boſome of the Earth; it ſtirreth up Fumes or Mercuriall and Sulphurous vapours, of which Metals are created, and mixeth it

ſelfe amongſt them ; it ſtirreth up fire, placed and ſnorting in the ſeeds of the Vegetables, and addeth ſparkles unto it (as Spurres) for vegetation. The Second lurketh in the bowels of the Earth, by the Impulſe and action whereof the Subterraneous vapours are driven upwards through Pores and Pipes, and thruſt outwards from the Centre towards the Superficies of the Earth, both for the compoſition of Metals, where the Earth ſwelleth up, as alſo for the production of Vegetables, by putrefying their ſeeds, by ſoftning and preparing them for generation. The third of the former, viz. Solar, is generated of a vappid ſmoak of Metals, and alſo infuſed with the monthly proviſion grows together with the humid matter, & is retained as in a Priſon within the ſtrength of it ; or more truely, as forme is conjoyned with the mixt body: It firmely inhereth in the ſeeds of Vegetables, untill being ſolicited by the point of its Fathers rayes it be called out, then Motion intrinſecally moveth and informeth the matter, and becomes the Plaſtes and Diſpenſator of the whole Mixture. In the generation of Animals, Celeſtiall Fire doth inſenſibly cooperate with the Animall; for it is the firſt Agent in Nature: but the heat of the Femella anſwereth Terreſtriall heat, untill it putrefie the Seed, and prepare it: The Fire implanted in the Seed, Sol's ſon, diſpoſeth the matter, and being diſpoſed in formeth it.

Threefold Fire of the Stone.

94. Philoſophers have obſerved a three-fold Fire in the matter of their work, Naturall, not Naturall, againſt Nature. The Naturall they call the Fiery Celeſtiall Spirit Innate, kept in the profundity of matter, and moſt ſtrictly ſtrictly bound unto it, which by the ſluggiſh ſtrength of metall growes dull, untill being ſtirred up and freed by the Philoſophers diſcretion and externall heat, it hall have obtained a faculty of moving its body diſſolved, and ſo t informeth its humid matter, by explication, Penetration, Dilatation and congelation. In every mixt body Naturall Fire is the Principle of Heat and Motion. Unnaturall Fire they name that which being called and coming extrinſecally, is introduced into he matter wonderfull artificially; hat it may increaſe and multiply he ſtrength of naturall heat. The Fire contrary to Nature they call hat, which putrefies the Compoitum, & corrupteth the temperament of Nature; It is imperfect, becauſe being too weak for generation, it is not carried beyond the bounds of corruption: ſuch is the Naturall.

Unnaturall

Againſt Nature.

Fire or heat of the menſtruum: yet it hath the name improperly of Fire againſt Nature, becauſe in a manner it is according to Nature, for ſalving the ſpecifical form, it ſo corrupteth the matter, that it diſpoſeth it for generation.

95. It is more credible nevertheleſſe, that the corrupting Fire, called Fire againſt Nature, is not different from the Innate, but the firſt degree of it, for the order of nature requireth, that corruption precede generation: the fire therefore that is innate agreeable to the Law of Nature performeth both, by exciting both ſucceſſively in the matter: the firſt of corruption more gentle ſtirred up by feeble heat, for to mollifie and prepare the body: the other of generation more forcible, moved by a more vehement heat, for to animate and fully informe the Elementary body diſpoſed poſed by the former. A double Motion doth therefore proceed from a double degree of heat of the ſame fire; neither is it to be accounted a double Fire. But far better may the Name of Fire contrary to Nature be given to violent and deſtructive Fire.

96. Unnaturall fire is converted into Naturall or Innate Fire by ſucceſſive degrees of Digeſtion, and increaſeth and multiplyeth it: Now the whole ſecret conſiſteth in the multiplication of Naturall Fire, which of it ſelfe is not able to Work above its proper ſtrength, nor communicate a perfect Tincture to imperfect Bodies; for it is ſufficient to it ſelfe; nor hath it any further power; but being multiplyed by the unnaturall, which moſt aboundeth with the virtue of multiplying, doth act far more powerfully, and reacheth it ſelfe beyond the bounds of Na-

Nature colouring ſtrange and imperfect bodies, and perfecting them, becauſe of its plentifull Tincture, and the abſtruſe Treaſure of multiplyed Fire.

The water of the Stone is Fire.

97. Philoſophers call their Water Fire becauſe it is moſt hot, and indued with a Fiery Spirit; againe, Water is called Fire by them, becauſe it burneth the bodies of perfect Metals more than common fire doth; for it perfectly diſſolveth them, whereas they reſiſt our Fire; and will not ſuffer themſelves to be diſſolved by it; for this cauſe it is alſo called Burning Water: Now that Fire of Tincture is hid in the belly of the Water, and manifeſts it ſelfe by a double effect, viz. of the bodies Solution and Multiplication.

Fire is twofold, intrinſicall and extrinſicall.

98. Nature uſeth a double Fire in the Work of generation, Intrinſecall, & extrinſecall: the former being placed in the ſeeds & mixtures of of things, is hid in their Centre; & as a principle of Motion and Life, doth move and quicken the body: But the latter, Extrinſecall, whether it be poured down from Heaven or Earth, raiſeth the former, as drowned with ſleep, and compels it to action; for the vitall ſparks mplanted in the ſeeds ſtand in need of an externall mover, that they may be moved and actuate.

99. It is even ſo in the Philoſophers worke; for the matter of the Stone poſſeſſeth his Interiour Fire, which partly Innate, partly alſo is added by the Philoſophers Art, for thoſe two are united and come inward together, becauſe they are homogeneous: the internall ſtandeth in need of the externall, which the Philoſopher adminiſtreth according to the Precepts of Art and Nature; this compelleth the former to move. Theſe Fires are as two Wheeles Wheels, whereof the hidden one being ſmitten of the ſenſible one, it is moved ſooner or later: And thus Art helpeth Nature.

100. The Internall Fire is the middle between the mover and the matter, whence it is, that as it is moved by that, it moveth thus; if ſo be it ſhall be driven intenſly or remiſly, it will work after the ſame manner in the matter. The Information of the whole worke dependeth of the meaſure of externall Fire.

101. He that is ignorant of the degrees and points of externall Fire, let him not ſet upon the Philoſophicall Worke; for he will never pull light out of darkneſſe, unleſſe the heats paſſe through their mediums, like the Elements, whoſe extreams are not converted but onely by mediums.

Foure degrees of Fire.

102. Becauſe the whole work con-conſiſteth in Separation and perfect Preparation of the foure Elements, therefore ſo many degrees of Fire are neceſſary thereunto; for every Element is extracted by the degree of Fire proper to it.

103. The foure degrees of Fire are called the Fire of the Bath, of Aſhes, of Coales, and of Flame, which is alſo called Optetick: every degree hath its points, two at leaſt, ſometimes three; for the Fire is to be moved ſlowly and by points, whether it be increaſed or decreaſed, that Matter (after Natures example may goe on by degrees and willingly unto Information and completion; for nothing is ſo ſtrange to Nature as that which is violent; Let the Philoſopher propound to his conſideration the gentle acceſſe & receſſe of the Sun, whoſe Light & Lamp indulgeth its heat to the things of the world, according to the times and and Lawes of the Univerſe, and ſo beſtoweth a temperament upon them.

The point of Fire. 104. The firſt point of the Bath of heat is called the heat of a Feaver or of Dung; the ſecond, of both ſimply. The firſt point of the ſecond degree is the ſimple heat of Aſhes, the ſecond is the heat of Sand: Now the points of Fire, of Coales and Flame, want a proper Name, but they are diſtinguiſhed by the operation of the Intellect, according to intention and remiſſion.

105. Three degrees onely of Fire are ſometimes found amongſt Philoſophers, viz. of the Bath of Aſhes and the hot Bath, which comprehendeth the Fire of Coals and Flame: the Fire of Dung is ſometimes diſtinguiſhed from the Fire of the Bath, in degree. Thus for the moſt part Authors doe involve the light in darkneſſe, by the

the various expreſſions of the Philoſophers Fire; for the knowledge therof is accounted amongſt their chief ſecrets.

Four Elements of the Stone.

106. In the White Work, becauſe three Elements onely are extracted, three degrees of Fire alſo do ſuffice; the laſt, to wit the Optetick, is reſerved for the fourth Element, which finiſheth the Red Work. By the firſt degree the eclipſe of Sol and Luna is made, by the ſecond the light of Luna begins to be reſtored: by the third Luna attaineth unto the fulneſſe of her ſplendour: and by the fourth Sol is exalted into the higheſt apex of his glory: Now in every part the Fire is adminiſtred acccording to the rules of Geometry, ſo as the Agent may anſwer to the diſpoſition of the Patient, and their ſtrength be equally poiſed betwixt themſelves.

107. Philoſophers have very much much ſet upon their Fire with a deſire of Secrecy, ſo as they ſcarce have been bold to touch it, but ſhew it rather by a deſcription of its qualities and proprieties, then by its name: as that it is airie Fire, vaporous, humid and dry, clear, ſtar-like, becauſe it may eaſily by degrees be intended or remitted as the Artificer pleaſeth. Hee that deſireth more of the knowledge of Fire; may be ſatisfied by the Works of Lullius, who hath opened the Secrets of Practice to candid minds candidly.

Proportion. 108. Of the conflict of the Eagle and the Lion they write diverſly, becauſe the Lion is the ſtrongeſt animall of all others; and therefore it is neceſſary that more Eagles concur, (three at leaſt, or elſe more, even to ten) to conquer him: the fewer they are the greater the contention, and the ſlower the Victory; but the more Eagles, the ſhorter the Battaile, and the direption of the Lyon will more readily follow. The happyer number of ſeven Eagles may be taken out of Lullius, or of nine out of Senior.

The Veſſels of Nature and Art.

109. The Veſſell wherein Philoſophers decoct their worke, is twofold; the one of Nature, the other of Art; the Veſſell of Nature which is alſo called the Veſſel of Philoſophy, is the Earth of the Stone, or the Femella or Matrix, whereinto the Seed of the Male is received, it putrefies, and is prepared for generation, the Veſſell of Nature is of three ſorts: for the ſecret is decocted in a threefold Veſſell.

110. The Firſt Veſſell is made of a tranſparent Stone, or of ſtony Glaſſe, the forme thereof ſome Philoſophers have hid by a certain Ænigmaticall deſcription; ſometimes affirming that it is compoun-pounded of two peeces, to wit, an Alembick, and a Bolts-head, ſometimes of three, othertimes of the two former with the addition of a Cover.

111. Many have feigned the multiplying of ſuch like Veſſels to be neceſſary to the Philoſophicall Work, calling them by divers names, with a deſire of hiding the ſecret by a diverſity of operations; for they called it Solutory of ſolution; Putrefactory for putrefaction; Diſtillatory for diſtillation; Sublimatory for ſublimation; Calcinatory for calcination, &c.

112. But that all deceit being removed we may ſpeak ſincerely, one onely Veſſell of Art ſufficeth to terminate the Worke of either Sulphur, and another for the Work of the Elixir; for the diverſity of digeſtions requireth not the change of Veſſels; yea we muſt have a care leſt the Veſſell be changed or opened before the Firſt work be ended.

113. You ſhall make choiſe of a forme of the glaſſy Veſſell round in the bottom or cucurbit, or at leaſt ovall, the neck an hand breadth long or more, large enough, with a ſtraight mouth, made like a Pitcher or Jugg, continued & uncutt and thick in every part, that it may reſiſt a long, and ſometimes an acute Fire: The cucurbit or Bolts head is called blind; becauſe its eye is blinded with the Hermetick ſeal, leſt any hing from without ſhould enter n, or the Spirit ſteal out.

114. The ſecond Veſſell of Art may be of Wood, of the trunk of an Oake, cut into two hollow Hemiſphears, wherein the Philoophers Egge may be cheriſhed ll it be hatched; of which ſee he Fountaine of Treviſanus.

115. The third Veſſell Practitioners have called their Furnace, which keeps the other Veſſels with the matter and the whole woik: this alſo Philoſophers have endeavoured to hide amongſt their ſecrets.

The Furnace. 116. The Furnace which is the Keeper of Secrets, is called Athanor, from the immortall Fire, which it alwayes preſerveth; for although it afford unto the Work continuall Fire, yet ſometimes unequally, which reaſon requireth to be adminiſtred more or leſſe according to the quantity of matter, and the capacity of the Furnace.

117. The matter of the Furnace is made of Brick, or of fatt Earth, or of Potters clay well beaten, and prepared with horſe dung, mixed with haire, that it may ſtick the faſter, and may not be chincked by long heat; let the walls be thick, of three or foure fingers, to the end that it may be the better able to keep in the heat and withſtand it.

118. Let the form of the Furnace be round, the inward altitude of two feet or thereabouts, in the midſt whereof an Iron or Brazen plate muſt be ſet, of a round Figure, about the thickneſſe of a Penknife's back, in a manner poſſeſſing the interiour latitude of the Furnace, but a little narrower then it, leſt it touch the walls, which muſt leane upon three or foure props of Iron fixed to the walls; and let it be full of holes, that the heat may be the more eaſily carried upwards by them, and between the ſides of the Furnace and the Plate. Below the Plate let there be a little door left; and another above in the walls of the Furnace, that by the lower the Fire may be put in, and by the higher the temperament of the heat may be ſenſibly perceived;

at the oppoſite part whereof let there be a little window of the Figure of a Romboides fortifyed with glaſſe, that the light overagainſt it may ſhew the colours to the eye. Upon the middle of the foreſaid plate, let the Tripode of ſecrets be placed with a double Veſſel. Laſtly let the Furnace be very well covered with a ſhell or covering agreeable unto it, and that alwayes the little doores cloſely ſhut, leſt the heat go out.

119. Thus thou haſt all things neceſſary to the firſt Work, the end whereof is the generation of two ſorts of Sulphur; the compoſition and perfection of both may be thus finiſhed.

The practice of Sulphur.

℞. Take a Red Dragon, couragious, warlik e, to whom no Naturall ſtrength is wanting; and afterwards ſeven or nine noble Eagles [Virgins,] whoſe eyes will not wax dull by the rayes of the Sun: caſt the Birds with the Beaſt, into a clear Priſon and ſtrongly ſhut up, under which let a Bath be placed, that they may be incenſed to fight by the warm vapour: in a ſhort time they will enter into a long and harſh contention, untill at length about the 45 day or 50. the Eagles begin to prey upon and teare the beaſt to pieces; this dying it will infect the whole Priſon with its black and direfull poyſon, whereby the Eagles being wounded, they will alſo be con ſtrained to give up the ghoſt. From the putrefaction of the dead Carcaſſes a Crow will be generated, which by little and little, puting forth its head, and the Bath being ſomewhat increaſed it will forthwith ſtretch forth its wings nd begin to fly; but ſeeking hincks from the Winds and Clouds, it will long hover about; ake heed that it find not any. At length being made white by a gentle and long Raine, and with the dew of Heaven it will be changed into a White Swan, but the new borne Crow is a ſign of the departed Dragon. In making the Crow White extract the Elements, and diſtill them according to the order preſcribed, untill they be fixed in their Earth, and end in Snow-like, and moſt ſubtile duſt, which being finiſhed thou ſhalt enjoy thy firſt deſire to the White Worke.

120. If thou intendeſt to proceed further to the Red, adde the Element of Fire, which is wanting to the White Work: the Veſſell therefore being fixed, and the Fire ſtrengthned by little and little through its points, force the matter untill the occult begin to be made manifeſt, the ſigne whereof will be the Orange colour ariſing: order the Fire of the Fourth degree by its points, untill by the helpe of Vulcan purple Roſes be generated of the Lilly, and laſtly the Amaranthus dyed with the darkiſh Redneſſe of bloud: but thou mayeſt not ceaſe to bring out Fire by Fire, untill thou ſhalt behold the matter terminated in Reddeſt aſhes, and inſenſible to the touch. This Red Stone may reare up thy minde to greater things, by the bleſſing and aſſiſtance of the holy Trinity.

121. They that thinke they have brought their worke to an end by perfect Sulphur, not knowing Nature or Art; and to have fulfilled the Precepts of the ſecret; are much deceived, and will try their Project in vaine: for the Praxis of the Stone is perfected by a double Worke; the Firſt is, in creating the Sulphur, the other in making the Elixir.

122. The Philoſophers Sulphur is moſt ſubtile Earth, moſt hot and dry, in the belly whereof the Fire of Nature abundantly multiplyed is hidden; Moreover, Fire deſerveth the name of the Stone; for it hath in it ſelfe the virtue of opening and penetrating the bodies of Metals, and of turning them into their own temperament and producing ſomething like it ſelfe, wherefore it is called a Father and Maſculine ſeed.

123. That we may leave nothing untouched, let the Students in Philoſophy know that from that firſt Sulphur, a ſecond is generated which may be multiplyed in infinitum: let the wiſe man, after he hath got the everlaſting minerall of that Heavenly Fire, keep it diligently. Now of what matter Sulphur is generated, of the ſame it is multiplyed, a ſmall portion of the firſt being added, yet as in the Ballance. The reſt may a freſhman man ſee in Lullius, this may ſuffice onely to point at it.

124. The Elixir is compounded of a threefold matter, namely of Metallick Water or Mercury ſublimated as before; of Leaven White or Red, according to the intention of the Operator, and of the Second Sulphur, all in Weight.

Compoſition of the Elixir.

125. There are Five proper and neceſſary qualities in the perfect Elixir, that it be fuſile, permanent, penetrating, colouring and multiplying; it borroweth its tincture and fixation from the Leaven, its penetration from the Sulphur, its fuſion from Argent vive which is the medium of conjoyning Tinctures, to wit of the Ferment and Sulphur, and its multiplicative virtue from the Spirit infuſed into the Quinteſſence.

126. Two perfect Metalls give a perfect Tincture, becauſe they they are dyed with the pure Sulphur of Nature, and therefore no Ferment of Metals may be ſought beſides theſe two bodies; dye thy Elixir White and Red with Sol and Luna, Mercury firſt of all receives their Tincture, and having received it, doth communicate it to others.

127. In compounding the Elixir take heed you change not or mixe any thing with the Ferments, for either Elixir muſt have its proper Ferment, and deſireth its proper Elements; for it is provided by Nature, that the two Luminaries have their different Sulphur and diſtinct tinctures.

128. The Second work is concocted as the Firſt, in the ſame or like Veſſell, the ſame Furnace, and by the ſame degrees of fire, but is perfected in a ſhorter time.

Three humours in the Stone.

129. There are three humours in the Stone, which are to be extracted tracted ſucceſsively; namely, Watery, Airy, and Radicall; and therfore all the labour and care of the Workman is employed about the humour, neither is any other Element in the Worke of the Stone, circulated, beſides the humid one. For it is neceſſary in the firſt place, that the Earth be reſolved and melted into humour. Now the Radicall humour of all things, accounted Fire, is moſt tenacious, becauſe it is tyed to the Centre of Nature, from which it is not eaſily ſeparated; extract therefore thoſe three humours ſlowly, ſucceſsively; diſſolving and congealing them by their Wheels; for by the multiplyed alterne reiteration of Solution and congelation the Wheel is extended, and the whole work finiſhed.

130. The Elixir's perfection conſiſteth in the ſtrict Union and inindiſſoluble Matrimony of Siccum and Humidum, ſo that they may not be ſeparated, but the Siccum may flow with moderate heat into the Humidum abiding every preſſure of Fire. The ſigne of perfection is, if a very little of it caſt in above the Iron or Brazen Plate being very hot, it flow forthwith without ſmoake.

131. ℞. Let three weights of Red Earth, or Red Ferment, and a double weight of Water and Aire, well beaten, be mixt together: let an Amalgama be made like Butter, or Metalline Paſte, ſo as the Earth being mollifyed may be inſenſible to the touch; Add one weight and an halfe of Fire: Let theſe be ordered in their Veſſell, the Fire of the firſt degree being moſt cloſely ſealed; afterwards let the Elements be extracted out of their degrees of Fire in their order, which being turned downownwards with a gentle motion hey may be fixed in their Earth, o as nothing Volatile may be aiſed up from thence, the matter t length ſhall be terminated in a ock, Illuminated, Red and Diphanous; a part whereof take at leaſure, and having caſt it into a rucible with a little Fire by rops give it to drink with its Red yle, and incere it, untill it be uite poured out, and goe away ithout ſmoake. Nor mayſt thou eare its flight, for the Earth beng mollifyed with the ſweetneſſe f the Potion will ſtay it, having eceived it, within its bowels:

hen take the Elixir thus perfected nto thine owne power, and keep t carefully. In God rejoyce, and e ſilent.

132. The order and method of ompoſing & perfecting the white lixir is, the ſame, ſo that thou ſeſt the white Elements onely in the compoſition thereof; but the body of it brought to the terme of decoction, will end in the plate; white, ſplendid, and cryſtall-like, which incerated with its White Oyle will obtaine the help of Fuſion. Caſt one weight of either Elixir, upon ten weights of Argent vive well waſhed, and thou wilt admire its effect with aſtoniſhment.
the

Multiplication of the Elixir.

133. Becauſe in the Elixir the ſtrength of Naturall Fire is moſt aboundantly multiplyed by the Spirit infuſed into the Quinteſſence, and the naughty accidents of bodies, which beſet their purity and the true light of Nature with darkneſſe, are taken away by long and manifold ſublimations and digeſtions; therefore Fiery Nature freed from its Fetters, and fortifyed with the aid of Heavenly ſtrength, workes moſt powerfully being included in this our fift Element: Let it not therefore be a wonder, if it obtaine ſtrength not onely to perfect imperfect things, but alſo to multiply its force and power: Now the Fountaine of Multiplication is in the Prince of the Luminaries, who by the infinite multiplication of his beams, begetteth all things in this our Orbe, and multiplyeth things generated, by infuſing a multiplicative virtue into the ſeeds of things.

134. The way of multiplying the Elixir is threefold: By the firſt; ℞ Mingle one weight of Red Elixir, with nine weights of its Red Water, and diſſolve it into Water in a ſolutory Veſſell, curdle the matter well diſſolved, and unite by decocting it with a gentle Fire, untill it be made ſtrong into a Rubie or Red Lamell, which afterwards incere with its Red Oyle, after the manner preſcribed untill it flow; ſo ſhalt thou have a medicine ten times more powerfull then the firſt. The buſineſſe is eaſily finiſhed in a ſhort time.

The Practice of Multiplication.

135. By the Second manner ℞ what Potion thou pleaſeſt of thy Elixlr mixed with its Water, the weights being obſerved; ſeale it very well in the Veſſell of Reduction, diſſolve it in a Bath, by inhumation, being diſſolved, diſtill it, Separating the Elements by their proper fires, and fixing them downwards, as was done in the firſt and ſecond work, untill it be a Stone; laſtly, incere it and project it. This is the longer, but yet the richer way, for the vertue of the Elixir is increaſed unto an hundred fold; for by how much the more ſubtile it is made by reiterated operations, by ſo much more both of ſuperiour and inferiour ſtrength it retaineth, & more powerfully operates. 136. Laſt-

136. Laſtly, take one Ounce of the ſaid Elixir multiplyed in virtue, and project it upon an hundred of purifyed Mercury, and in a little time Mercury made hot amongſt burning Coals, will be converted into pure Elixir; whereof if thou caſteſt every ounce upon an other hundred of the like Mercury, Sol will ſhine moſt purely to thine eyes. The multiplication of White Elixir may be made the ſame way. Take the virtues of this Medicine to cure all kinds of diſeaſes, and to preſerve good health, as alſo the uſe thereof, out of the Writings of Arnoldus de villa nova, Lullius and of other Philoſophers, may be fetched.

137. The Philoſophers Signifer will inſtruct him that ſeeketh the times of the Stone; for the firſt Work ad Albũ muſt be terminated in the Houſe of Luna; the Second, in the ſecond Houſe of Mercury; the

The Times of the Stone.

The firſt Work ad Rubeum, will end in the Second Houſe of Venus, and the laſt in the other Regall Throne of Jove, from whence our moſt Potent King ſhall receive a Crowne decked with moſt Precious Rubies:

Sic in ſe ſua per veſtigia volvitur Annus.

Thus does the winding of the circling Yeare
Trace its owne Foot-ſteps, and the ſame appeare.

138. A three-headed Dragon keeps this Golden Fleece; the firſt head proceedeth from the Waters, the ſecond from the Earth, the third from the Aire; it is neceſſary that theſe three heads do end in one moſt Potent, which will devour all the other Dragons; then a way is laid open for thee to the golden Fleece. Farewell diligent Reader, in Reading theſe things invocate the Spirit of Eternal Light; Speak little, Meditate much, and Judge aright.

TO

To the Lovers of Hermetick Philoſophy I. C. Chymieraſtes wiſheth proſperity.

SUch is the difference between the Hermeticks living Philoſophy, and the dead Philoſophy of the Ethnicks; that the former hath been Divinely inſpired into the firſt Maſters of Chymiſtry [the Queen of all Sciences,] and therefore may challenge the Holy Spirit of Truth for its onely Author; who by breathing where he liſteth, doth infuſe the true Light of Nature into their minds; by virtue whereof, all the darkneſſe of errours is ſtraight-wayes chaſed away from thence and utterly expelled: but the latter may aſcribe its Invention unto Pagans, who having left, or rather neglected the pure Fountains of Learning, have introduced falſe Principles and cauſes, (proceeding from their own brain) for true ones, to the great dammage of the Reipublique of Learning. And indeed what good were they able to do, upon whom the Day-Star of Truth, the Eternall Wiſedome of God, the Fountaine of all Knowledge and Underſtanding Chriſt Ieſus hath never riſen? We cannot wonder therefore, that they have onely propoſed old wives Fables, and fooliſh toyes, that they have introduced pure dotages, and innumerable inventions of lyes, whereby they have ſo bedawbed holy Philoſophy, that we can find nothing of Native-beauty in it.

But you will object that Hermes himſelf the Prince of Vitall Philoſophy was an Heathen alſo, yea and lived before other Authors many ages, by whoſe decrees Philoſophy in every place entertained, with greateſt applauſe of almoſt all men, now flouriſheth. But granting that, what followeth? This Hermes Triſmegiſtus indeed was borne in an Heathen Country, yet by a peculiar priviledge from God he was one, who worſhipped the true God in his life, manners and Religion eſpecially; who freely confeſſed God the Father, and that he was the Creator of Man, and made no other partaker of Divinity with him: He acknowledged the Son of God the Father, by whom all things which are exiſtent, were made; whoſe name becauſe it was wonderwonderfull and ineffable, was unknowne to Men, and even to Angels themſelves, who admire with aſtoniſhment his generation. What more? He was our Hermes who by the ſingular indulgence and revelation of the moſt great and gracious God, foreknew that the ſame Son ſhould come in the Fleſh, and that in the laſt ages, to the end he might bleſſe the Godly for ever. He it was who ſo clearely taught, that the myſtery of the moſt Holy Trinity ought to be adored, as well in the Plurality of Perſons, as in the Unity of Divine Eſſence, in three Hypoſtaſes, (as any quick-ſighted and intelligent man may gather from that which followes;) as that it can ſcarcely be found any where more clearly and plainly: for thus he: There was an Intelligent Light before the Intelligent Light, and there was alwayes a cleare Mind of the Mind: and the Truth hereof, and the Spirit containing all things, was no other thing: Beſides this God is not, nor Angell, nor any other Eſſence; for he is Lord of all, both Father, and God, all things are under him, and in him. I beſeech thee O Heaven, and the wiſe worke of the great God; I beſeech thee thou voice of the Father, which he firſt ſpake, when he formed the whole world: I beſeech thee by the onely begotten Word, and Father containing all things, be propitious unto me.

Now yee ſons of Hermes, turne over and over againe, both night and day the Volumes of Heathen Philoſophers, and inquire with what diligence you poſſibly can; whether you are able to find ſuch Holy, ſuch Godly and Catholick things in them.

Our Hermes was an Heathen, I confeſſe, yet ſuch an Heathen as knew the power and greatneſſe of God, by other creatures and alſo by himſelfe, and glorified God, as God: I ſhal not ſpare to ad, that he far excelled in godlineſſe moſt Chriſtians now a dayes in name onely; and gave immortall thanks unto him as the Fountaine of all good things, with a deep ſubmiſſion of mind for his benefits received. Hear I pray, yee ſonnes of Learning, whether God was as much converſant, and wrought as equally in the Heathen Nation, as amongſt his own people, when he ſaith: From the riſing of the Sun unto the going downe thereof his name is great amongſt the Gentiles; and in every place a pure oblation is ſacrificed and offered unto my name, becauſe my name is great amongſt the Nations, ſaith the Lord of Hoſts by his Prophet.

Rub up your memory, I intreat you, and ſpeake plainly; were not the Magi Heathens, which came from the Eaſt by the guidance of a Star, that they might worſhhip Chriſt, whom nevertheleſſe the unbeleeving people hanged upon a Tree. Laſtly conſider well I beſeech you, yee faithfull favourers of true Wiſedome onely; from what Fountaine other Heathens beſides Hermes have taken the Principles of their Learning. Weare and better weare out their Volumes with diligence, that yee may diſcerne them to refer their wiſdome not unto God, but to attribute it, as gotten by their owne Induſtry. On the contrary caſt your eyes upon the beginning of the admirable Tractate having ſeven Chapters of your Father Hermes concerning the Secret of the Phyſical Stone, and obſerve how holily he thinketh of God the beſtower of this Secret Science: for Hermes ſaith: In ſo great an Age I have not ceaſed to try experiments, nor have I ſpared my Soul from labour: I had this Art and Science by the Inſpiration of the Living God only, who hath vouchſafed to open it to me his ſervant. Tis true, he hath given power of judging to rational creatures, but hath not left unto any an occaſion of ſinning. But I, unleſſe I feared the day of Doom, or the ſouls damnation for the concealing of this Science; I would make known nothing of this Science, nor prophetize to any. But I have been willing to render to the Faithfull their due, as the Author of Faith hath been pleaſed to beſtow upon me. Thus Hermes: then which nothing could have ever bin ſaid more wiſe, or more agreable to Chriſtian Religion. And hence it is, that ſo many as are or have been of a more ſublime wit and manly judgement, have imbraced the Living, Holy, and Divine Philoſophy of Hermes, with all their Soul and Strength (rejecting that dead, prophane, and humane Philoſophie of the Ethnicks) and have commended and illuſtrated it in divers of their Writings and Watchings. Of all which which, that I may confeſſe ingenuouſly, ſeeing that I could never read unto this day any Writer more true, neat, and clear, then the Author of this Tractate, Anonymus indeed, yet one that truly deſerves the name of an Adepted Philoſopher; I have thought it worth my pains, and have deemed hereby to confer not the leaſt favour upon the ſons of Hermes, if I ſhall againe publiſh the hidden Work of Hermetick Philoſophy, with the Philoſophers Signifer, according to the intention of this moſt wiſe Author.

THE TIMES OF THE STONE.

The Interpretation of the Philoſophers Scheme.

The Figure deſcribed is the Philoſophers Signifer. To every Planet a double Houſe is aſſigned by the Ancients, Sol and Luna excepted; whereof every one borroweth one Houſe onely, both of them adjoyning. In the ſaid Figure every Planet poſſeſſeth its proper Houſes. Philoſophers in handling their Philoſophical work, begin their yeare in Winter, to wit, the Sun being in Capricorne, which is the former Houſe of Saturne, and ſo come towards the right hand. In the Second place theother Houſe of Saturn is found in Aquarius, at which time Saturne i.e. the Blackneſſe of the Dominary work begins after the 45 or 50. day. Sol coming into Piſces the worke is black, blacker then black, and the head of the Crow begins to appear. The third month being ended, and Sol entring into Aries ries, the ſublimation or ſeparation of the Elements begins. Thoſe which follow unto Cancer make the Worke White. Cancer addeth the greateſt whiteneſſe and ſplendour, and doth perfectly fill up all the dayes of the Stone or white Sulphur, or the Lunar worke of Sulphur, Luna ſitting and reigning glorioſly in her Houſe. In Leo the Regal Manſion of the Sun, the Solar work begins, which in Libra is terminated into a Rubie-Stone, or perfect Sulphur. The two Signes Scorpius and Sagitarius which remaine, are indebted to the compleating of the Elixir. And thus the Philoſophers admirable young taketh its beginning in the Reigne of Saturne, and its end and perfection in the Dominion of Jupiter.

ERRATA

This is a complete list of errors found in the source material of volume III. Rather than correct the text it was decided to leave them as they appear. The majority of them are simple spelling mistakes. For particular problems and other matters with individual pages, see "Notes to Manuscripts".

XXIII-8	Marginal note, "filiorum Lucis" should be "filii filiorum Lucis"
XXIII-15	Seventh line down, "And Michael Semiel" should read "And Michael called Semiel" (see II-2, near the bottom, where the original text can be found).
XXIV-40	First word, "Occidentatalium" should read "Occidentalium".

BOOKS XXI–XXIV (SL 3191)

These are Dee's finished works, or his attempt at gathering together, or collecting, all relevant information on a certain theme of the work.

Published Versions:

- Much of this material can be found in JAMES. Unfortunately, the author takes too many liberties, especially with the Forty-Eight Keys (e.g., the first Key is clearly stated as having precisely eighty-six words, yet the JAMES version has ninety-two). Includes Latin translations.
- Book XXI can be found (with some changes) in REGARDIE and a number of more recent versions. See also LEITCH: a substantial work, but introduces a couple of errors not seen elsewhere, probably due to a misreading of the manuscript.
- Book XXIII was published as TURNER HM. No doubt this work has been quite useful to students, but it does contain many errors and omissions, some of them major. Useful for its Latin translations.
- Book XXI, XXII, and XXIV were published in a more condensed form in TURNER EM. This work also contains many errors. Useful for its Latin translations.
- Book XXIV: A similar work to this is S&R, which is a transcript of British Library MS. Sloane 307. The authors, in their introduction, have made a series of errors, e.g., (probably their most serious error) the four Tables of Enoch that appear in the work are not Dee's final corrected versions (as stated), but, are simply copies drawn from TFR, and contain a number of errors. The fact that they both contain the very same errors proves this point. These errors are continued throughout the work with regard to the names drawn therefrom. This is clearly not a translation of Dee's work and then expanded, as is suggested, as it bears little resemblance to it, and for several other reasons that would take up too much space to go into. In my view this is basically an original work—with regard to the invocations—the rest of the material has been hashed together using TFR as a basis.

BOOK XXII

Title page ▪ "Liber Scientiæ, Auxilii et Victoriæ Terreſtris A°. 1585 Maii 2° ſtylo novo Cracoviæ in Polonia per Δ Collectus ex præmissis, in Lib°. 10°. & aliis".
This reads: "The Book of Science, Aid and Earthly Victory, on the 2nd May in the year 1585, in the new ſtyle, at Cracow in Poland, Collected by Δ [Dee] from the premisses in Book 10 and in others".

p. 2 ▪ Biblical quotation (top): "Quando dividebat Altissimus Gentes Quando separ-abat filios ADAM, constituit terminos populorum, iuxta numerum filiorum Israel. Moyses, in Cantico. Deuter. 32":

	"When the most High divided to the nations their inheritance, when he separated the sons of Adam, he set the bounds of the people according to the number of the children of Israel" In the Song of Moses: Deuteronomy 32:8 [from KJV]. • Biblical quotation (bottom): "Et habebat murum magnum, et altum, habentem portas Duodecim: et in portis, ANGELOS Duodecim, et Nomina inscripta, quæ sunt Nomina Duodecim Tribuum filiorum Israel. Apocalypseos. Cap. 21": "And had a wall great and high, and had twelve gates, and at the gates twelve angels, and names written thereon, which are the names of the twelve tribes of the children of Israel" Revelation 21:12 [from KJV].
p. 4	• In column 7, the figure "15960" (adding them together from the figures immediately to its left), should be "14960". Originally this was given correctly (see X-63), but was then crossed out and changed for reasons unknown.
p. 5	• In columns 7 and 8 Dee has reversed the two headings in error, this he attempted to correct with leader lines pointing to the correct columns. In the present work, this has been corrected.
p. 7	• In row 13 the sigil for Lazdixi has been omitted. This sigil can be found in XXIV-7, Table 2, which passes through the extreme bottom left corner.
p. 12	• No sigils appear for these three parts of ZAX as their names are formed from the Black Cross (all but the "L" of "Lexarph") and I would assume that no sigils should be formed.
p. 24	• No sigil has been given to Paraoan here. This name is formed from all four Tables and it is unclear whether a sigil should be formed or not.
p. 28	• "Bazchim", third column at the bottom: the "l" under the letter "i" (signifying an alternative spelling) has been misplaced, and should be under the initial letter "B" (see XXIV-9, 6th col. 10th row).
p. 33	• These two diagrams show the twelve tribes of Israel before and after their dispersal.

BOOK XXIII

Title page	• "De Heptarchia Mystica, (Divinis, ipsius Creationis, stabilita legibus) Collectaneorum Liber Primus". This reads: "The First Book of Compilations of the Mystic Heptarchy (established, of his own Creating, by Divine laws)".
p. 8	• Marginal note (near top): "Il. cuius nomen est prima filiorum Lucis: et ponitur in charactere ipsius Baligon sive Carmara Regis": "Il, which is the name of the first of the Sons of Light, and is included in the character [seal] of Baligon or King Carmara". Dee makes a mistake here, as this is not the first "Son of Light", but is the first "Son of the Sons of Light", which appear in each of the seals of the kings.
p. 9	• The twenty-second line down has been omitted from TURNER HM.
p. 15	• Lines eleven–fourteen down have been omitted from TURNER HM.
p. 16	• The third line down and part of the fourth has been omitted from TURNER HM.
p. 19	• At number 2, bottom half, the word "drops" would appear to be correct in this manuscript, but IV-15 (the original source for this text) clearly reads "drosse".
pp. 19–25	• Note that the sigil just above the king's name is the seal of the king and not the seal of the angel (one of the Sons of the Sons of Light) that it contains (i.e., El, An, Ave, Liba, Rocle, Hagonel, Ilemese), as found in JAMES.
p. 22	• TURNER HM omits the text for Butmono, giving the impression that the seal, just below, is that of King Bynepor.
p. 32	• Blumaza is here left blank in the manuscript.
p. 36	• Bagenol is here left blank in the manuscript.
	• Marginal note (in Latin) reads, "See Suidas on the word Ephod, where concerning the Sapphire, in which the giving of different signs, answers were received from God. See Epiphanius concerning the same reasoning with precious stones. See the Scriptures on the Urim and Thummim. See the books received at Trebon etc. 'For it is written in the law (says Epiphanius), the Vision, which appeared to Moses on the Mount and the giving of the Law, had been expressed in a sapphire'. Antonius Mizaldus: Memorabilium Century 4. Number 94". "Suidas" is not a person, as was commonly thought, but a work, the "Suda", which is a huge tenth century Greek historical encyclopaedia, the author of which is unknown.

BOOK XXIV

Title page	• A Booke of Supplications and Invocations. The original title for this work is lost; the present title is supplied by Elias Ashmole.
pp. 4–5	• These are the reformed Tables of Enoch, but compare with XIX-29.
pp. 6–7	• These tables should be repositioned to agree with the reformed tables.
pp. 8–9	• This is Dee's attempt to correct the tables, as many of the letters can be seen crossed out and replaced. Note the eighth line down, where the letters have been shifted one place to the left. This has caused much confusion over the years, as it affects all names that cross this line, including the name "Paraoan", mentioned in several places in this work, about which the angels were very specific (the "R" being one of the reversed letters, which would now become the letter "O"). In my opinion this shifting of the letters is wrong, probably an error made by Kelley when recording this information.
p. 11 et seq.	• From this point on Dee's abbreviation signs can be seen: a tilde like character above a final vowel, in most cases, would be followed by the letter "m" (e.g., "nostrũ" = "nostrum"). Similar signs, some elongated, can stand for more that one letter (e.g., "ñri" = "nostri"). The letter "q" with what appears to be a small capital "R" attached to its right side, is short for "que".
p. 12	• This table, and the four following, include some alternative names, e.g., "Abioro sive Habioro" ("sive" = "or" in Latin). The reason is not that Dee was unsure of the correct spelling (as in S&R mentioned above), but because the longer names are believed to possess more power (see appendix X "Complete Angelic Lexicon" for more information on particular names).
p. 16	• Note the name of King Edlprna: all of the kings have dual names, where the last letter changes, being either comiter or in extremis Iudiciis (see the note for Book XI p. 51), but with Edlprna the final letter is the same for both names, therefore to distinguish between them Dee adds a loop to the foot of the final "A" (see at the bottom of the page).

BOOK XXV (SL 3189): LIBER MYSTERIORUM SEXTUS ET SANCTUS

This last book is also known as The Book of Enoch or Loagaeth (Note that on some occasions Dee has referred to his four Tables of Enoch as "The Book of Enoch". This has caused some confusion in the past. This is also, apparently, the book that Dee tried so hard to have silvered (see XI-13 where this is first mentioned). This book is not part of the above collection, i.e., it hasn't been gathered from any diary entries (the second table–set as text–does appear in Book V but has some minor discrepancies when compared to this book), but is a work written by Kelley and it was considered a very important part of the whole scheme. This has never before been published (apart from a version by Joseph H. Peterson, available on CD from www.esotericarchives.com, which, unfortunately contains too many errors to be useful) due probably to the difficulties involved, which have now been largely resolved. I present my version to the reader with some possible alternative readings.

BOOK XXV

For convenience, I have added table numbers at the bottom of each page. Tables 1a and 1b are originally to be found in Book V. This present work starts with the last row (i.e., row 49) of Table 1a, but set as text; only the last 9 lines of Table 1b appear as a table, so that the first complete table (appearing as such) starts with Table 2a (XXV-11). Therefore the numbers that appear in the margin from the first page are wrong, and should shift down, so that number 2 becomes 1 etc. (see also the note to p. i below). Please note that in the following notes I have abbreviated row and column coordinates in the form "R*x* C*y*", where x is the row number and y is the column number, beginning from the top left square of each table.

Note 1	• This note was written by Sir Frederic Madden (see "Brief Biographical Guide"), former Keeper of Manuscripts at the British Museum.
Note 2	• Unknown author.
Note 3	• Unknown author.
Title page	• "Liber Mysteriorum, Sextus et Sanctus. Liber 8^{us}".

This reads: "The Sixth and Sacred Book of [the] Mysteries". At the bottom of the page, "The Eighth Book".

p. i • This note is by Elias Ashmole. To clarify: these tables start from V-16 (each square containing one whole word, as can be seen), with the last (49th) row (of the first table) ending at V-43 (with the top two lines). It then continues with the second table (beginning "Oxar varmol", etc.) to V-50, where the last nine rows can be seen set in a table as single letters. In this book (XXV) the first table has been omitted, except for the last row, set down at the beginning of p. 1 (see Dee's note in V-50, second paragraph under the table).
At the end of the note, Ashmole refers to "l°. 5to MS. p. 150, 151 &c". This is an abbreviation for "libro quinto manuscripto" (i.e., "in the fifth manuscript book"); the page numbers referred to are Ashmole's own numbering system, and are not those found in the present work.

pp. 1–104 • The following characters have been used: ʃ = s, ẟ = s, ʒ = ʐ, ꝣ = χ. Kelley uses these forms throughout this work, so I thought it wise to follow suit.

pp. 1–9 (1a–1b) • The originals of Tables 1a–1b can be found in V-40–50. However, there are a number of discrepancies in the text as follows (the second word of each equation being found in book V):

p. 1 • The first part of this page, ending at the cross on the seventh line, is the last row of Table 1a, the remainder of this page and subsequent pages, up to and including p. 9, are from Table 1b.
Third line down, first word "vall" = "val". Tenth line down, last word "nodax" = "nondax". Fifteenth line down, second word "ab-mi-ca-dam-pâ-get" = "ab-mi-cad-am-pâ-get". Seventeenth line down, second word "navádah" = "navadáh". Tenth line up, seventh word "arneth" = "aneth".

p. 2 • Third line down, fifth word "astmah" = "asthmah".
Fifth line down, fourth word "alpoh" = "alphoh".
Tenth line down, fifth word "ínmony" = "inmony".
Thirteenth line down, sixth word "désmaphi" = "désmaph".
Fourteenth line down, first word "ca-pra-mi-na-cah" = "cap-ra-mi-na-cah"; second word "ox-an-dan-vah" = "ox-and-an-vah".
Sixteenth line down, third word "olmáh" = "ólmah".
Last line, seventh word "ox" missing from Book V.

p. 3 • Fifth line down, fourth word "sel-pa-gí-no-dah" = "sel-pag-in-o-dah".
Seventh line down, after the fourth word "gón," comma missing from Book V; after the fifth word "sa," comma missing from Book V.
Tenth line down, first word "órmaca" = "ormaca".
Thirteenth line down, fourth word "do-ca-bá ah" = "do-ca-ba-ah".

p. 4 • Third line down third word "ad-ni-sá-pa-loh" = "ad-ni-sa-pa-loth".
Fourth line down, first word "noxar" = "noxa".
Fifth line down, last word "arla" = "arta".
Sixth line down, after the second word "zvbah," comma missing from Book V.
Seventh line "zá-da-phi-cá-no" = "zá-da-phi-cár-no".
Twelfth line down, first word "Savbeloh" = "Savbloth"; third word "nar" = "nvr".
Thirteenth line down, last word "sémbbh" = "sembbh".
Tenth line up, last word "na-ca-pí-coh" = "va-ca-pí-coh".
Ninth line up, third word "vonsá" = "vonsa".
Fifth line up, second word "vox-ár-pi-cah" = "vox-ar-pi-cah".
Fourth line up, second syllable "zím" = "zim".

p. 5 • Some of the marginal numbers and internal crosses on this page are wrong, and should be compared to Book V.
Fifth line down, second word "getons" = "gestons".
Eighth line down, second word "gunzánqvah" = "gunzanqvah".
Fourteenth line down, third word "Zedothnar" = "ledothnar".
Ninth line up, third word "nonsap" = "nansap".
Sixth line up, last word "vxana" = two words "vxa na" in Book V.

p. 6 • Dee's marginal numbers are missing from this page.
Third line down, last word "natosm" = "nastosm".
Ninth line down, seventh word "ofsd" = "osfd".
Eleventh line up, seventh syllable "neoh" = "eoh".

Seventh line up, first word "gednah" = "gednach".
Sixth line up, fifth word "voxsah" = "vorsah".

p. 7 • Eighth line down, fifth word "sableh" = "sableth".
Tenth line up, third word "odícoh" = "odiscóh".
Third line up, third word "gém-la-pa" = "gem-la-pa".
Second line up, after the fourth word "micápar", comma missing from Book V.

p. 8 • First line, second word "lvzá" = "lvza".
Third line down, second word "Nó-bro-ch" = "No-bro-ch".
Sixth line down, second word "órsa" = "orsa".
Eleventh line up, first word "donzahá" = "donazahá".
Ninth line up, second word, first syllable "Zár" = "Zar".
Sixth line up, first word "gadmáh" = "gadmah".
Fifth line up, last word "aqna" = "amna" (this word "amna", looks more like "aqua" in the marginal note, see V-50).
Third line up, third word "nostvamph" = "nostúamph"; fourth word "Vàn-sa pál-sah" = "Vàn-sa-pal-sah".

p. 9 • The table (the last part of Table 1b) on this page has the following inconsistencies (mainly relating to accents and commas).
R1 C30 "e" = "c"; C33 "e" = "c"; C40 "ó," = "ó"; C49 "m," = "m".
R2 C15 "í" = "i"; C30 "c" = "e"; C41 "f," = "f"; C46 "v" = "a"; C49 "s," = "s".
R3 C17 "ŕ" = "r"; C35 "n," = "n"; C37 "á" = "a"; C46 "á" = "a".
R4 C5 "é" = "e"; C14 "x" = "r"; C39 "á" = "a"; C44 "x," = "x".
R5 C20 "z" = "s"; C49 "o" = "a".
R6 C37 "á" = "a"; C49 "g," = "g".
R7 C25 "á" = "a".
R8 C38 "ó" = "o".
R9 C33 "á" = "a"; C35 "á" = "a".

pp. 11–104 • Where a square is totally indecipherable it has been left blank. A number of other squares are doubtful (e.g., the letter "a" in some cases could perhaps be an "o", etc.), but an educated guess has been made (these are not all listed below). In one or two places the edge of the page is badly worn, making most of that edge blank, as on p. 24.
The following is a list of doubtful letters, and in every case the letter entered is, in my opinion, the most likely. The first letter given is what appears in the table, letters after the slash are alternatives. This list includes all those letters that are virtually impossible to determine with any great accuracy.

pp. 11–57 (2a–25a) • Tables 2a–25a are what I call standard tables (i.e., all the letters are read from the bottom of the page and every square contains a letter).

p. 11 (2a)	• Title: "alla opnay qviemmah".	R30 C2 "v" doubtful, smudged.
p. 12 (2b)	• Title: "zvrebth aho dan lanfal cramza".	R11 C14 "l" doubtful, only partially visible.
	R11 C12 "l" barely visible.	R19 C4 blank, smudged.
p. 13 (3a)	• Title: "pandobna ox adroh azimchol drux".	R47 C3 "d" very doubtful.
	R21 C24 "h/b" unclear, may have been changed.
p. 14 (3b)	• Title: "dlod Alged zvrem" in English, but  ("dlod allged zuram") in Angelic.	R3 C2 "v" very doubtful. R22 C44 blank, smudged.
p. 15 (4a)	• Title: "Zvbla ox arnogan Algers aclo".	R37 C18 blank, smudged.
	R36 C20 "m" doubtful, smudged.	R38 C40 "a" doubtful, barely visible.
p. 16 (4b)	• Title: "Danfal gest Axamph acrosta".	R33 C22 "e" doubtful, not much visible.
	R24 C21 blank, not much visible.
p. 17 (5a)	• Title: "Gonzahoh alch arge oho Adanch".	R31 C34 "ll" appears to be double.
	R9 C31 "e" doubtful, barely visible.	R42 C49 "e" doubtful, partly smudged.

p. 18 (5b)	• Title: “Zvchastors plohodmax argednon acho”. R8 C32 “c” doubtful, only partly visible.	R13 C19 blank, not much visible. R48 C14 blank, smudged.
p. 19 (6a)	• Title: “Sancgonfal aldex, Ave goh adatqvan”.	R44 C27 “n” possibly “m”, smudged.
p. 20 (6b)	• Title: “pvrcha ges maxgem adroth vaxox ahó”. R33 C1 blank, not much visible.	R36 C32 “o” doubtful, barely visible. R49 C49 “a” doubtful, barely visible.
p. 21 (7a)	• Title: “Dam lethgath onzar avoxalgeth”. R3 C31 “g” an odd form of “g”?	R49 C31 “t” an odd form of “t”?
p. 22 (7b)	• Title: “Ch:vmaxchaberexmapha”. R20 C9 blank, nothing visible. R28 C1 blank, not much visible. R34 C48 blank, nothing visible.	R34 C49 blank, nothing visible. R38 C49 “d” smudged. R41 C22 “8” seems unlikely, but seems clear in the manuscript.
p. 23 (8a)	• Title: “algebadreth”. R5 C1 blank, hole in the manuscript.	R15 C1 “d” doubtful, not much visible. R28 C1 blank, not much visible.
p. 24 (8b)	• Title: “Oylzongs”. Column 49 is mostly blanks, nothing visible in many of these squares. R5 C45 “p” doubtful, too messy.	R24 C3 “l” doubtful, smudged. R24 C4 “d” doubtful, not much visible. R25 C3 “b” doubtful, not much visible.
p. 25 (9a)	• Title: “pagasgem”. Note: this is the only Table that contains numbers, except possibly 7b.	R23 C3 “g” from TFR, nothing visible, hole in the manuscript.
p. 26 (9b)	• Title: “Avallacax”. R16 C48 “ll” appears to be double.	R42 C45 – 47 “o l d” these appear to have been changed from “r t g”.
p. 27 (10a)	• Title: “Gorvemgemps”.
p. 28 (10b)	• Title: “Bacap Lafsos” in English, but  (“Bacap Laffos”) in Angelic. Note that this Table has larger letters at its centre (a square of 21 by 21 letters).	R17 C49 “t” doubtful, not much visible. R18 C45 “n” doubtful, not much visible. R19 C49 “h” doubtful, not much visible. R37 C49 “a” doubtful, not much visible. R38 C11 “o” unclear, smudged.
p. 29 (11a)	• Title: “Ozimba Londorh”. Note that this Table has larger letters at its centre (a square of 19 by 19 letters).
p. 30 (11b)	• Title: “Ylchvzzapg”.
p. 31 (12a)	• Title: “Nopham”. R3 C22 “ii” doubtful, possibly crossed out.	R18 C18 “tt” perhaps majuscule “H”. R13 C1 “g” doubtful, not much visible.
p. 32 (12b)	• Title: “Signeh gax”. R12 C21 “d” doubtful, smudged. R21 C48 “d” doubtful, smudged. R26 C48 “o” doubtful, not much visible. R27 C48 blank, not much visible. R29 C19 blank, unclear, perhaps “d”.	R43 C2 “r” doubtful, smudged. R30 C49 “a” unclear. R31 C49 “o” unclear. R32 C49 “l” unclear. R39 C2 “b” unclear. R41 C47 “ȝ” unclear

pp. 108–115	• These Tables do not actually form a part of this work, my only reason for including them is that they are now bound together with the same manuscript. They are in fact copied from the Book of Soyga, mentioned in several places by Dee. Long thought to be lost, copies of this work have now been identified by Deborah Harkness as British Library MS. Sloane 8 and Bodleian MS. Bodley 908 (see HARKNESS, pp. 44–45). This work contains thirty-six tables, of 36 by 36 squares, each table being attributed to one of the signs of the Zodiac (two tables to each sign), a Planet, or one of the four Elements and one odd table attributed to Magistri ("Masters" or "of the Master"). For some reason Dee has copied eight of them, which we find here. Some of these tables have lacunæ; particularly the first, due to decay, but these tables follow a mathematical formula and so can easily be reconstructed (see REEDS).

De Heptarchia Myſtica,
(Divinis, ipsius Creationis, ſtabilita legibus)
Collectaneorum
Liber Primus

(from British Library MS. Sloane 3191)

In septenariis totus Mundus circumagitur omnium quæ et Viva gignuntur, et quæ nascuntur. Septem quidem sunt, (quorum est maxima potentia): Primogeniti Angelorum Principes &c. Clemens Alex: strom. lib: 6.

De HEPTARCHIA MYSTICA, (Divinis, ipsius Creationis, stabilita legibus) Collectaneorum Liber primus.

Cap ·1·

Of the Title, and generall Contents of this boke, some nedefull Testimonies.

Aº 1582. Novemb. 16. Bralges, the last of 7 Princes, concluding the First boke hereof with his words.

Beware of wavering: Blot oute suspition of us; for we are gods Creatures that have Raigned, do Raigne, and shall Raigne for ever. All our Mysteries shalbe known unto you. &c.
Behold, these things and theyre mysteries, shalbe known unto you: Reserving, the Secrets of him, that Raigneth for ever [the voyce of a multitude, answered, singing] Whose Name, is great for ever.

King Carmara. eodem tempore. - Open your eyes, and you shall see from the highest to the lowest. The peace of God be uppon you.

Carmara Novemb. 17. - Venite, Gradatim repetamus Opera Dei; &c.

Prince Hagonel - Vnus est Deus, et unum est opus n*ostrum*.

Nota
Δ libº Creationis · 1º Principes loquebantur magnalia Dei: et secundo, Reges maxime hoc faciunt.

Δ Note - very many cam uppon the convex superficies of the Transparent Globe, and sayd, Parati sumus servire Deo nostro.

King Carmara. Novemb. 19. - This work shall have relation to tyme present, and present use. To mysteries far exceading it: And finally to a purpose & Intent: whereby the Maiestie and Name of God, shall and may, and, of force, must appeare with the Apparition of his wunders, and mervayles yet unhard of. Dixi.

Δ Note, As Michaël and Vriel, at the begynning of these revealed mysteries, were present, and gave Authority to Carmara, to order the whole Heptarchicall Revelation; so, at the Conclusion, they appeared agayn and Raphaël with them; and Michael concluded the second boke (of this particular Revelation Heptarchicall,) with these words following.

Michael Novemb. 19.

Mercifull is our God, and Glorious is his Name: which Chuseth his Creatures, according to his owne secret Iudgment. This Art is the first part of a Threefold Art, Ioyning Man, (with the knowledg of the [1] world, the [2] Government of his Creatures, and the [3] Sight of his Maiestie) unto him: (ô I say unto him,) which is Strength, Medicine, and Mercy to those that feare him. Amen.

King Carmara: Novemb. 21. in appendix of the second boke.

Thow hast a work of three proportions in Esse: of Seven in forme, which is (of it self) divided by a Number Septenarie: Of the Course, estate, and determination of things Above, things Next, and Things Below. Which of it self, is pure, perfect, and withoute blemish, &c.

King Carmara: Novemb. 21.

O God, how easy is this first understanding? Thow hast byn told perfectly, plainly, and absolutely, Not onely, the Condition, dignitie, and estate of All things that God hath framed: But allso, withall, Thow wart delivered, the most perfect forme & use of them, &c.

King Carmara Novemb. 17.
*Even as God is iust, his Iudgments true, his Mercies unspeakable, So are we the True messagers of God: and our words are true in his Mercies forever.
Glory, (ô Glory) be to the, O most High God.*

Now you towche the world, and the doings uppon Earth. Now we shew unto you the lower world: The Governors that work and Rule under God. By whome you may have powre, to work such things, as shalbe to Gods Glory, profyt of your Cuntry, and the knowledg of his Creatures &c. We procede to One God, one knowledg, one Operation. Venite filiæ.

Michael Aprilis 29. A^{o} 1582.
·49·
*Behold these Tables: Herein lye theyr Names, that work under God uppon earth: Not of the wycked, but of the Angels of Light.
The whole Government doth consist in the hands of 49 (in God his powre, strength, Mercy, and Iustice), whose Names are here evydent, excellent, and glorious. Mark these Tables: Mark them, Record them to your Cumfort: This is the first knowledge. Here shall you have wisdome. Halleluyah. Mighty and Omnipotent art thow, ô God, God, God, Amongst thy Creatures: Thow fillest all things with thy excellent foresight. Thy Glory Be amongst us, for ever.* - Δ - Amen.

Vriel.
The fowntayne of wisdome is opened: Nature shalbe knowne. Erth with her Secrets discloased. The Elements wth their powres iudged &c.

Vriel. Aprilis 29. A^{o} 1582.
Behold, I teache: There are 49 Angels glorious and excellent: appointed for the Government of all erthly Actions: which 49 do work and dispose the will of the Creator: Limited from the begynning, in strength, powre and glory: These shalbe Subiect Unto you: In the Name and by Invocating uppon the Name of God: who doth lighten, dispose and cumfort you, &c.

King Carmara. Novemb, 19. of King Bobogel his princis Minis=ters.
What doth the heaven behold, or the Earth conteyne, that is not, or may be subdued, formed and made by these? What lerning grownded uppon wisdome, with the excellencies in Nature, can not they manifest?
One in heaven they know:
One, and all, in Man they know:
One, and all in earth they know.
Measure heaven by a part, (my meaning is, by these few). Let God be glorified: his name praised, his Creation well taken: and his Creatures well used.

Vriel. Maii 5. A^{o} 1583.
He that standeth in the myddst of the Globe signifieth Nature: whereuppon in the first point, is the use and practise of this work: That is to say, as concerning the first part, for it is sayde: The boke conteyneth three kinde of knowledgis.

The knowledge of God truely.
The Number and doing of his Angells perfectly.
The begynning and ending of Nature Substantially.

Cap .2. †

Of Iohn Dee, his principall, and in manner peculier Interest, to exercise the Doctrine Heptarchicall.

Vriel A^{o} 1582. Novemb. 15. - Vltima est hæc ætas vestra, quæ tibi revelata erit.

Michael - The Mysteries of God have a tyme: And Behold, Thow art provyded for that tyme.

Prince Hagonel Novemb. 16.
The Sonnes of men,$^{\Delta\ light}$ and theyr Sonnes, are Subiect unto my com= maundement: This is a Mysterie. I have spoken of it: Note it throwghly: They are my Servants: By them, Thow shalt work marvayles.

Prince Hagonel Novemb. 16. - There are kings fals, and uniust, whose powre, as I have augmented$^{\Delta\ subverted}$ and destroyed, So shallt Thow$^{\Delta}$.

....em, eodem tempore. - The second Assembly were the Governors of the earth: whose Glory, (yf they be good) the weapons we have towght thê$^{\Delta}$*, will augment;
And, Consequently, (yf they be evyll) pervert.*

Prince Bornogo Novemb. 16.
I am Bornogo: This is my Seale: This my true Character. What thow desyrest in me, shalbe fullfilled. Glory to God.

Prince Befafes eadem die.
*Behold, Behold, lo Behold, my mighty powre consisteth in this.
Learne wisdome by my words. This is wrowght for thy erudition, what I enstruct the from God. Loke unto thy Chardg truely:
Thow art yet dead. Thow shalt be revyved: But oh blesse God truely. The blessing, that God giveth me: I will bestow uppon the, by permission. Ô how mighty is our God: which walked on the waters: which sealed me with his name: whose Glory is withoute ende. Thow hast written me, but yet dost not ~~know~~ know me. Use me in the Name of God: I shall at the tyme appointed be ready. I will Manifest the works of the Seas:
And the miracles of the depe, shall be known.*

Carmara 17. Novemb.
*Behold, thow desyrest, and art syck with desyre: I am the disposer thowgh not the Composer of Gods medicines. Thow desyrest to be cumforted and strengthened in thy labors: I mynister unto the the Strength of God. What I say is not of my self: neather that which is sayde to me, is of them selves: but it is sayde of him which liveth for ever. These Mysteries hath God lastly, and of his great Mercyes graunted unto the. I have answered thy dowting mynde.
Thow shallt be glutted, yea filled: yea thow shalt swell and be puffed up with the perfect knowledg of Gods mysteries in his Mercies.*

Abuse them not. Be faithfull: use Mercy: God shall enriche the: Banish

*Annael gave me that Commaundement A° 1581: in the preface as it were of all these Actions.

*wrath: yt was the fir*st and the greatest Commaundement. I rayng by him, and lyve by him, which raigneth and liveth for ever.*

King Carmara. die 17 Novemb.

I have shewed the perfectly: Behold I teach the againe. O how mercifull is god, that revealeth so great Secrets to flesh and blud. Thow hast 42 letters. Thy Tables last, conteyne so many &c.

When Thow wilt work for any thing apperteyning to the estate of a good King Carm. eodem temp.

Whan Thow wilt work for any thing apperteyning to the estate of a good king, Thow must first call uppon him, which is theyr prince. Secondly the Ministers of his powre, are Six, &c.

King Carmara: eodem temp.

In owtward sense, my words are true: I speak now of the use of one of the first, that I spake of, or Manifested yesterday. Sayd I not, And shewed I not, which had the government of princis: for as it is a Mysterie to a farder matter, So is it a purpose to a present use. Yf it Rule worldly princis: how much more shall it work, with the princis of Creation? Thow desyrest use: I teach use. And yet the Art is to the farder understanding of all Sciences, that are past, present or yet to come. frute hath farder vertue, then onely in the eating: Gold his farder condition, property and quality, then in melting, or common use. Kings, there are in Nature, with Nature, and above Nature. Thow art Dignified, &c.

The Ring

King Carmara: eodem tempore.

Last of all thy Ryng, which was appointed the, with the Lamyne, comprehending the forme of thy owne name: which is to be made in perfect gold: as is affore sayde.

King Carmara. eodem tempore.

Thow shalt be cumforted: But respect the world to come; whereunto thow art provyded: and for what ende: and that in what tyme. Serve God truely: Serve him iustly. Great care is to be had with those that meddle with princis affaires: Much more Consideration with whome, Thow shalt meddle, or use any practise: But God hath shaddowed the, from destruction. He preserveth his faithfull, and shaddoweth the Iust, with a shield of honor. None shall enter into the knowledg of these Mysteries with the, but this worker. Thy estate with the prince (now raigning) shall shortly be amended. Her favor encreased with the good wills of divèrse, that are now deceyvers. Thy hands shall shortly be their help: and thow shallt do wunderfull and many benefits (to the Augmenting of Gods glory) for thy Cuntry. Finally; God doth enriche the with knowledg: & of thy self hath given the understanding of these worldly vanities. He is mercifull: And we, his good Creatures, neyther have, do nor will forget the. God doth blesse you both: whose mercy, goodnes, and grace, I pronownce and utter uppon you. I have sayde.

King Bobogel Novemb. 19.

Dee, Dee, Dee, At length, but not to late.
[Δ Note: king Bobogel sayd this of my atteyning to such ~~mynisters~~ mysteries, as the mynisters under him made shew of.]

King Carmara Novemb. 20.

Lo, thus thow seest the glory of gods Creatures: whome thow mayst use, with the consideration of the day, their king, their Prince, and his Character. The king & prince govern for the whole day: the rest according to the six partes of the day. Use them to the glory, prayse and honor of him, which Created them, to the lawde & prayse of his Maiestie.

King Bynepor. 20. Novemb.

Write this reverently. Note it with Submission. What I speak, hath not byn revealed: no not in these last tymes of the second last world &c. Thow shalt work marvaylous marvaylously by my workmanship in the highest.

King Bnaspol. 20. Novemb.

Unto my Prince (my Subiect) are delivered the keyes of the Mysteries of the Erth: All these are Angels that govern under him: &c. Use them; they are, & shalbe, at thy Commaundement.

King Bnaspen. 20. Novemb.

By me, Thow shalt cast out the powr of wycked Spirits. By me, Thow shalt know the doings & practises of evyll men. And more, then may be spoken, or uttred to man.

King Carmara. 21. Novemb.

Receptacle

King Carmara. Novemb. 21.

One thing is yet wanting: a mete Receptacle &c. There is yet wanting a stone, &c. One there is most excellent: hid in the Secret of the depth &c, in the uttermost part of the Roman possession, &c. Lo the mighty hand of God is uppon the &c. Thow shalt prevayle with it, with kings, and with all Creatures of the world: whose beautie (in vertue) shall be more worth then the kingdomes of the earth &c. Go toward it, and take it up &c: kepe it sincerely: Let no mortall hand towch it, but thy own.

A° 1583 Maii 5.

Baligon sive Carmara Regis.

Thy Character must have the names of the five Angels (written in the midst of Sigillum Æmeth) graven uppon the other side in a Circle. In the middst wherof must the stone be (which was allso browght). Wherein, Thow shalt at all tymes Beholde, (privately to thy self) the State of Gods people, throwgh the whole earth.

Raphaël
Martii 26.
A° 1583.

Go and thow shalt receive. Tary & you shall receive. Slepe & you shall see. But watch and your eyes shalbe fully opened: One thing which is the grownd & element of thy desyre, is allready perfited &c. Oute of Seven, Thow hast byn instructed (of the lesser part) most perfectly.

All those before spoken of are Subiect to thy Call, &c. Of frendeship, at any tyme, thow mayst see them: and know what thow wilt.

Every one (to be short) shall at all times and seasons shew the direction in any thing &c.

One thing I answer the, for all offycis. Thow hast in subiection all officis. Use them whan it pleas the, and as thy Instruction hath byn.

Vriel
Aprilis 23.
A° 1583.

The lord sayeth, I have hardened the hart of One of you: yea I have hardened him, as the flynt, and burnt him togither with the ashes of a Cedar. To the intent he may be proved Iust in my work: and great in the Strength of my Glory. Neyther shall his mynde consent to the wyckednes of Iniquity: for, from Iniquitie I have Chosen him to be a first Erthly witnes of my Dignitie.

Michael his

Δ - Vriel; cam in agayne, and an other with him, and iointly they two sayde togither, Glorify God for ever: And now Vriel stode behynde and the other sat down in the chayre, with a sword in his right hand All his hed glistred like the sonne: the heare of his hed was long He had wyngs: and all his lower partes seamed to be with feathers. He had a robe over his body, and a great light in his left hand: he sayd, We are blessed from the begynning, and blessed be the Name of God for ever.

Michael
Martii 11.
A° 1582.

Δ - An innumerable Cumpany of Angels were abowt him. And Vriel did leane on the square table by. He that sat in the Chayre, sayde then - Go forward: God hath blessed the.
I will be thy gwyde.
Thow shalt atteyn unto thy seaching.
The World begyns with thy Doings.
Prayse God.
The Angels under my powre, shalbe at thy Commaundement.

Thow shalt see me.
I willbe seen of the.
And I will direct thy living and Conversation.
Put up thy penne.

Michael Martii. 14.

The Ring

Δ - Now Michael thrust out his right arme, with the sworde: And bad the Skryer to loke. Then the Sword did seame to cleave in two: And a great fyre flamed out of it vehemently. Then he toke a Ring out of the flame of his sworde: and gave it to Vriel, and sayde, The strength of God is unspeakable. Praysed be God for ever, and ever: Δ - Then Vriel did make Cursy to him.

ℂ Some Remembrances of the furniture and Circumstances necessary in the Exercise Heptarchicall.

King Carmara in the presence of Michael. A° 1582. Novemb. 17.

First cast thy eye unto the Generall Prince, Governor or Angell that is Principall in this world. Then place my name whome thow hast allready: Than the Name of him, that was shewed the yesterday [with the short coate]. Then his powre, with the rest of his six perfect Ministers. With these thow shalt work to a good ende. All the rest thow mayst use to Gods glory: for every one of them, shall minister to thy Necessities.
Moreover, whan thow workest, thy feete must be placed uppon these Tables, which thow seest written last, comprehending 42 letters and Names. But with this Consideration: that the first Charac= ter (which is the first of the 7, in thy former boke) be placed uppon the top of the Table; which thow wast, and art, and shalt be commaunded to have, and use.

The Table

The Ring

Last of all the Ryng: which was appointed the: with the Lamyne comprehending the forme of thy own name: which is to be made in perfect Gold: as is affore sayde.
Even as God is Iust, his Iudgments true, his Mercies unspeakable: So are we the True Messagers of god.
And our words are true in his Mercy for ever. Glory
O Glory, be to the, Ô most high God.

King Carmara. Novemb. 20.

Lo, thus thow seest the glory of Gods Creatures: whome thow mayst use, with the Consideration of the day, their king, their Prince, and his Character. The king and Prince Govern for the whole day: The rest according to the six parts of the day. Use them to the glory, prayse, & honor of him, which Created them, to the lawde & prayse of his Maiestie.

K. Carmara. Novemb. 21.

The Characters of the kings are in the Globe; And of the Princis, in the Heptagonon:

Prince Hagonel, Novemb. 16.

The Sonns of $\overset{\text{△ light}}{\text{men}}$, and their Sonnes, are Subiect unto my Commaundement. This is a mysterie. I have spoken of it.
Note it throwghly. They are my Servants. By them, thow shalt work mervayles. My tyme is yet to come. The Operation of the earth is Subiect to my powre. And I am the first of the twelve. My Seale is called Barees: and here it is.

P. Hagonel, eodem tem= pore.

·1· In his Name, with my Name, by my Character, & the rest of my Ministers, are these things browght to pass. These that ly heare are witches, enchanters, deceyvers, blasphemers. And finally all they: that use Nature, with Abuse: and dishonor him which raigneth for ever.
·2· The Second Assembly, were the Governers of the earth whose Glory, yf they be good, the weapons which we have towght the: will augment:
And Consequently (yf they be evyll) will pervert.
·3· The Third Assembly are those, which taste of Gods Mysteries, and Drink of the Iuyce of Nature: whose myndes are divided:
Some with eyes looking toward Heaven: The rest to the Center of the Erth: Vbi non Gloria, nec Bonitas, nec Bonum est.
It is wrowght, (I say) it is wrowght (for thy understanding) by the Seven of the Seven, which were the Sonns of Sempi= ternitie: whose Names thow hast written, and Recorded to Gods glory.

P. Hagonel, oedem tem= pore.

Note. Prince Butmono sayd this: but the office is under king Bnaspol, whose prince is Blisdon. The Mystery of this I know not yet: For Blisdon will be fownd to be the proper minister of king Bnaspol. Vide A° 1583 Maii 5, of the Making of Mensa fœderis, and my Golden Lamyne.

Mark this: All Spirits enhabiting, within the Erth: where their Habitation is of force, not of wyll: (Except the Myddst of my self, which I know not) are Subiect to the Powre herof.
[pointing to his Seale] With this, you shall Govern: Wyth this you shall unlok: with this (in his name who raigneth) you shall discover her entrayles.

King Carmara. Novemb. 17.

Whan thow wilt work for any thing appertayning unto the estate of a good king. Thow must call uppon him, which is theyr Prince.
Secondly the Ministers of his Powre are Six: whose Names conteyn 7 letters apece. As thy Tables do manifest. By whome in generalty, or by any one of them in particularitie: Thow shalt work for any Intent or purpose. As concerning the letters, particularly.
They do concerne, the Names of 42, which 42, in generally or One of them, do and can work, the destruction, hindrance or annoyance, of the estate, condition, or degree (as well for body as government) of any wycked, or yll living Prince, &c.

King Carmara. dei 17: Novemb.

Venito Bobogel, Rex et Princeps Nobilitatis: Venito cu*m* Ministris:
Venito (inquam) venito cu*m* Satellitibus tuis, munitus.

[Δ: This I Note for the form of calling]

Babalel, to his Prince: eode*m* temp.

Veni Princeps 7 principum, qui sunt Aquaru*m* Principes: Ego sum Rex Potens et mirabilis in Aquis; cuius potestas, est aquaru*m* visceribus.

Carm. eode*m* t.

Venito, veni (inquam) Adesto: Veni Rex. O Rex, Rex, Rex Aquarum
Venito. Venito (inquam) Magna est tua, Maior autem mea potestas:

Carm. eodem t.

Vita*m* dedit Deus omnibus Creaturis. Venite: Veni Ignis: Veni vita mortaliu*m* (inquam) Venito, Adesdum. Regnat Deus. O venite. Nam unus ille

Regnat, et est vita viventium.

K. Car. - eodem temp. Venite, ubi, nulla quies sed stridor dentium.

K. Car. aliter Baligon. eodem tempore. Venite vos, qui sub mea estis potestate.

K. Car. 21 Novemb. Behold; every one of these Princis must have his peculier Table.

Vriel Maii 5. A° 1583. Thy Character must have the names of the five Angels (written in the Myddst of Sigillum Æmeth) graven uppon the other side, in a circle. In the mydst whereof, must the Stone be; which was allso browght, wherein, thow shalt at all tymes, Beholde, (privately to thy self) the state of gods people, throwgh the whole earth.

Vriel 1583 Maii 5. The 4 fete of the Table, must have 4 hollow things, of Sweet wood: where uppon they must stand. Within the hollownes wherof, thy Seales may be kept unperished. One month is all for the use therof. The sylk must be of diverse Cullours: the most changeable that can be gotten: for who is hable to behold the glory of the seat of God.

eodem tempore quo supra. Δ - The Character or Lamyne for me was noted (A° 1582 Novemb. 17) that it shold conteyne some token of my name: And now in this accownted the True Character of Dignification, I perceyve no peculier Mark or Letters of my Name.

Vriel - The forme, in every corner considereth thy Name. Δ - You meane, there, to be a certayne shaddow of Delta. Vriel - Well.

Vriel. Creationis insignia. Δ - What is the use of the 7 Tables, (like Armes) and from what grownd are they framed, or derived ?

Vriel - They are the ensignes of the Creation: wherewithall they were Created by God: known only by theyr acquayntance, & the manner of their doings.

Vr. eodem tempore. Δ - Have I rightly applyed the dayes to the kings ? Vriel - The dayes are rightly applyed to the kings.

Eodem temp. Δ - The Characters, and words annexed to the kings names, in the utter Circumference of the great Circle or globe, how are they to be used?

Vr. - They are to be paynted on swete wood: And so to be held in thy hand, as thow shalt have cause to use them.

Il. Aprilis 28. 1583 Sigillum Æmeth, is to be set in the Middle of the Table.

Il. the first of the 7 Sonns of Sonns of light. Aprilis 28. A° 1583. Grace, mercy and peace be unto the lively branches of his florishing Kingdome. And strong art thow in thy Glory, which dost unknyt the Secret partes of thy lively workmanship: and that, before the weak understanding of man. Herein is thy powre and Magnificence Opened unto man. And why ? bycause thy divinitie and Secret powre, is here shut up in numero Ternario, et Quaternario. A quo Principium, et fundamentum omne huius est tui sanctissimi Operis.

For yf thow (ô God) be wonderfull and incomprehensible in thyne owne Substance, yt must nedes follow, that thy works, ~~likewise~~, are likewise, incomprehensible. But Lo, they shall now beleve, bycause they see: which heretofore, could skarsly beleve: Strong is the Influence of thy Supercelestiall powre: And mighty is the force of that Arme, which overcommeth all things. Let all power (therfore) rest in the. Amen.

Δ The living and semper adherent Minister to K. Baligon.·. and his name is exprest in his Character. Vide Novemb. 21. A° 1582.

Leave oute the Bees of the 7 names of the 7 kings, and 7 Princis. And place them in a Table divided by 12 and 7. The 7 spacis being uppermost. And therin write in the upper lyne, the letters of the king, with the letters of his Prince following next after his name. And so of the Six other, and theyr Princis. And read them on the right hand, from the upper part to the lowest. And thow shalt fynde, then, the Composition of this Table.

Therin, they are all comprehended: saving certayne letters, which are not to be put in here. By reason that the kings & Princis do spring from God: And Not God from the kings and Princis. Which excellency is comprehended: and is allso manifest, in that Third and fowrth member.

Fortè, Number

Rownd abowte the sides [of this square Table] is every letter of the 14 Names, of the 7 kings and princis.

Hereafter, Shall you perceive, that the Glory of this Table surmownteth the Glory of the Sonne. All things els that appertayneth unto it, are all ready prescribed by your former Instruction.

God is the begynning of all things, but not after One sort: Nor to every one alike. But it is Three manner of works with his Name:

The One, in respect of Dignification.
The Second, in respect of Conciliation.
The Third, in respect of an ende, and determined Operation.

Il or E. Aprilis 29. A°. 1583.

Now Sir, to what ende wold you weare your Character ? &c. But how do I teach ? The Character is an Instrument appliable Onely to dignification. But there is no Dignification (Syr) but that which doth procede, and hath his perfect Composition, Centrally, in the Square Number of 3 and 4. The Centre wherof shall be equall to the greatest. Hereby you may gather, Not onely to what ende, the Blessed Character (wherewith thow shalt be dignified) is prepared: But allso the Nature of all other Characters.

Dignification

To the Second. Δ - Conciliation, you meane?
Conciliation Il - The Table is an Instrument of Conciliation. And so are the other 7 Characters, which you call by the Name of Tables:
Squared out into the forme of Armes: which are propre to every King, and Prince, according to theyr order.
Now to the last. Δ - As concerning the ende & determyned Operation. Il - It onely consisteth in the Mercy of God,
& the Characters of these Bokes, &c.*
Set down the kings, and theyr Princis, in a Table, as thow knowest them: with theyr letters backward: (excepting theyr Bees) from the right hand to the left. Let Bobogel be Δ - Note, here, it may appere that Butmono is Prince to Bynepor, and Blisdon, prince to King Bnaspol. the first, and Bornogo his Prince, &c.

Δ. Note

Δ - So, on my Character or Lamyne of dignification: are all the names of the 7 kings, and of the 7 Princis, perfectly as in the great Table, (called often tymes Mensa fœderis), the Bees, onely, (being the first letter common to them all) kept bak, in memory.

De Sigillo Æmeth; al*iter*, vocato Sigillo Dei.

Michael - I will shew the in the mighty hand and strength of God, what his Mysteries are: The true Circle of his Æternitie: comprehending all Vertue: The whole and Sacred Trinitie: Oh holy be he: Oh Holy be he: Oh holy be he.

Δ - Vriel answered; Amen.

Mich. - Now, what wilt thow? Δ - I wold full fayne procede according to the Matter in hand.

Mich. - Divide this owtward Circle into 40 equall partes: whose Michael 1582. Martii. 19. greatest numbers are 4. See thow do it presently. Δ - I did so, dividing it first into 4: and then every of them, into 10.
Δ - He called one by name, Semiel. One came in, and kneled down:
and great fyre, came out of his mowth, Michael sayd, To him are the Mysteries of these Tables known. Michael sayd, Semiel (againe) and by & by he answered, O God thow hast sayde, and thow livest for ever, &c.
Semiel stode up and flaming fyre cam out of his mowth, and than he saide, as followeth.

Semiel - Mighty lord, what woldst thow with the Tables?

Michael - It is the will of God, Thow fatch them hither.

Sem. - I am his Tables. Behold, these are his Tables, Lo where they are.

Δ - There cam in 40 white Creatures, all in white Silk long robes; And they like Childern. And all they, falling on their knees, sayde.

Thow onely, art Holy among the Highest: O God, thy Name be blessed for ever.
Δ - Michaël stode up out of his Chayre: and by & by All his leggs semed to be like two great Pillers of Brasse: & he as high, as half way to heven. And by and by, his Sworde was all on fyre: And he stroke or drew his sword over all these 40 their heds. The Earth quaked. And the 40 fell downe. And Michael Semiel with a Thundring voyce: and sayde, Declare the Mysteries of the living God: our God: of One that liveth for ever.

Sem. - I am ready.

Michael 1582. Martii. 19.

Δ - Michael stroke over them with his sword: and they all fell downe (and Vriel allso) on his knees. And commonly at the striking with the sworde, flaming fyre, like lightening, did flash withall.

Michael - Note, Here is a Mysterie.

Δ - Then stept furth, One of the 40, from the rest: & opened his breast, which was covered with Sylk, and there appeared a great T all of Gold.

Michael - Note the number. Δ - Over the T, stode the Number of 4, on this fashion $\overset{4}{T}$.

Δ - The 40, all, cryed: Yt liveth, and Multiplyeth for ever: Blessed be his Name.

Δ - That Creature did shut up his bosome, and vanished away like a fyre.

Michael - Place that, in the first place: It is the Name of God.

Δ - Then there seameth a great Clap of thunder to be:

And so furth: And note that the whole Second boke is Nothing els but the Mysteries most Mervaylous of Sigillum Dei: otherwise called Sigillum Æmeth. Wherof here I did but leave a little admonishment.
Note farder, Almost all, the Third boke, was of the 7 Ensignes of Creation. Wherof mention was here before made.

Δ - The Chayre was browght in againe, and I axed what it ment?

Vriel - This is a Seat of perfection: from which, Things shalbe shewed unto the, which thow hast long desyred.

Δ - Than was a square Table browght into the Stone: and I demaunded, what that Table betokened.

Vriel - A Mysterie not yet to be known. These two shall remayne in the stone, to the sight of all undefyled Creatures.

You must use a fowre square Table; Two Cubits square: whereuppon must be set Sigillum Dei: al*i*ter Divinitatis. &c.

This Seale must not be loked uppon, without great Reverence and devotion. This Seale is to be made of perfect wax.

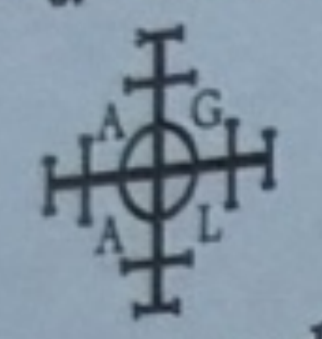
This Seale must be 9 ynches square [Δ or diameter].

This Seale must be 27 ynches, and somewhat More.

The rowndeness must be 27 ynches, and somewhat More.

The thicknes of it must be, an ynch and a half quarter.

And a figure of a Crosse, must be on the backside of it made thus:



The Table is to be made of swete wood: & of two Cubits high: with 4 fete, with 4 of the former seales under the 4 feete.

Under the Table did seame to be layde red sylk two yards square.

And over the Seale, did seame likewise red Silk to lye fowr square: broader then the Table, hanging down with 4 knopps or Tassels, at the 4 corners therof.

Uppon this uppermost red Sylk, did seme the Stone with the frame, to ~~stand~~ be set: right over and uppon the Principall Seale: Saving that the red Sylk, was betwene the one, & the other.

Novemb. 21. Aº 1582. – Δ - There appeared the first Table covered, with a cloath of sylk, changeable cullour, Red & greene, with a white Cloth under it, all hanging very low.

Caput 4.

Some Notice of peculier formes, and attire, wherein, the Kings, Princis and Ministers Heptarchicall appeared, and of some their Actions, and gestures at their apperance, &c.

King CARMARA - This king, (being called first by Vriel) appeared, as a Man, very well proportioned: clad in a long purple Robe: and with a Triple Crowne of Gold on his hed.

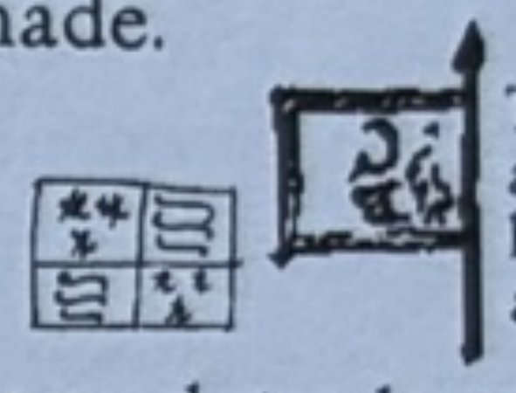
At his first comming he had 7 (like men) waiting on him: which afterwarde declared them selves to be the 7 Princis Heptarchicall.

Vriel delivered unto this king (at his first appearing) a rod or straight little rownd Staff of Gold: divided into three equall distinctions: whereof, two, were dark or blak: and the third bright red. This rod he kept still in his hand.

This king onely, was the ordrer, or disposer, of all the doctrines, which I terme Heptarchicall: as first, by calling the 7 Princis and after that, the 7 kings: and by giving instructions for use and Practise of the whole doctrine Heptarchicall: for the first purpose, and frute therof to be enioyed by me: of the two other there was onely mention made.

King CARMARA sayd,

Ecce signum operis.

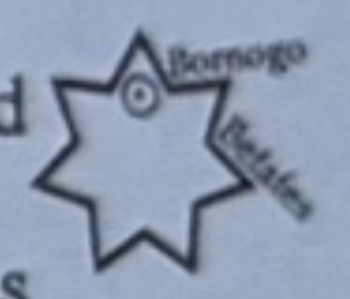


There appered these two letters eversed and aversed on a white flag: and a woman standing by: whose armes did not appere. On the other side appered the armes of england. The flag old.

Prince HAGONEL - Note. All the Princis, seemed to be men, and to have red Robes, but this Prince, his Robe was shorter then the others.

All the Princis, had Cerclets, of Gold on theyr heds: not crowns nor Coronets. This Prince held in the palme of his right hand, as yf it had byn a rownd ring, with a prick in the mydst: hanging allso over his myddle fingers, which he affirmed to be his seale: and sayd the name of it, to be Barees: and this it is ⊙ .

All the Princis held up to gither, Heptagonon Stellare, (as I terme it) and it seamed to be of copper:



Subiects and Servants to Prince Hagonel. - The Sonnes of men (Δ. light) and theyr Sonnes are Subiect unto his commaundement, and are his Servants.

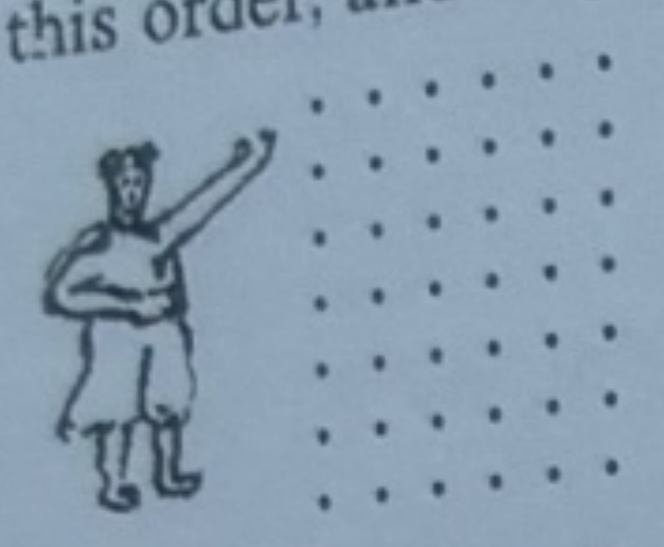
7. Filii Filiorum	E.	An.	Aue.	Liba:	Rocle:	Hagonel.	Ilemese.	Æmeth

Filii Lucis Aº 1582 Martii 21 - The ·7· Filii Lucis, appeared, like 7 yong men, all with bright countenance: white apparaled: with white silk on theyr heds, pendant behinde with a wreth down to the grownde: all apparayled of one sort. Every one seamed to have a metalline Ball in his hand: the first of Gold: the Second of Silver. The 3 of Coper. The 4th of Tynne, The 5th of Iern; the 6th tossed betwene his two hands, a rowd thing of quick silver. The last had a ball of lead. The first had on his brest a rownd Tablet of Gold: and on it written a great I. And the second on his golden Tablet had his name allso written. And every one orderly comming furth shewed theyr names uppon their golden Tablets: At theyr departing they made cursy & mownted up to heven ward:

Filii Filior*um* - Appeared like 7 little Childern, like boyes covered all with purple, with hanging sleves, like preists, or scholers gown sleves: theyr heds attyred all after the former manner with purple Sylk. They had three cornered Tablets on their brests: and the Tablets seemed to be very greene: and on them, the letters of their names written. The first had two letters, made in one thus, of E and L : E. They made reverence to Michael (who had called both, ye first & these) and so mownted up to heven ward.

Prince Hagonel his 42 Ministers.

- At the Call of King Carmara (in the Second handling of this Heptarchicall doctrine) whan he sayd, Venite, Repetamus Opera Dei, Appered Prince Hagonel: and after that, uppon the Globe his Convex Superficies, appeared 42: who sayd Parati sumus servire Deo nostro. Eche of these, had somewhat in theyr hands: and they stode in this order, and Hagonel seamed to embrace the Cumpany.



Six of these seamed more glorious then the rest: & theyr coates longer: and had Cerclets of Gold, abowt theyr heds: and held in theyr hands perfect Crownes of Gold. The Second Six had three quarters of Crowns in theyr hands: The third six have robes or clothes in theyr hands: All the rest seamed to have balls of Gold: which they tosse from one to an other. But at the Catching, they seame empty wynde Balls: for they gripe them cloasing theyr hands, as yf they were not solid, but empty like a blown bladder. The first six made cursy to Prince Hagonel. The second six made cursy to the first, & the Third to the Second: And they all, and Prince Hagonel made Cursy, to King CARMARA.

Eche of these uppon the place of theyr Standing, made a Table and every Table had but one letter. The first of the first Six did go away, and in his Table appered an O. & so of, the rest: but note that The Third six cowred down, & was loath to shew their Tables: but at length did.

The Third row, went of lamenting: being commaunded by the Prince. All parted, in fyre, falling into the Globe.

The fifth row did Synk into the Globe, every one in a sundry fyre by him self. The sixth fell with smoke, down into the Globe.

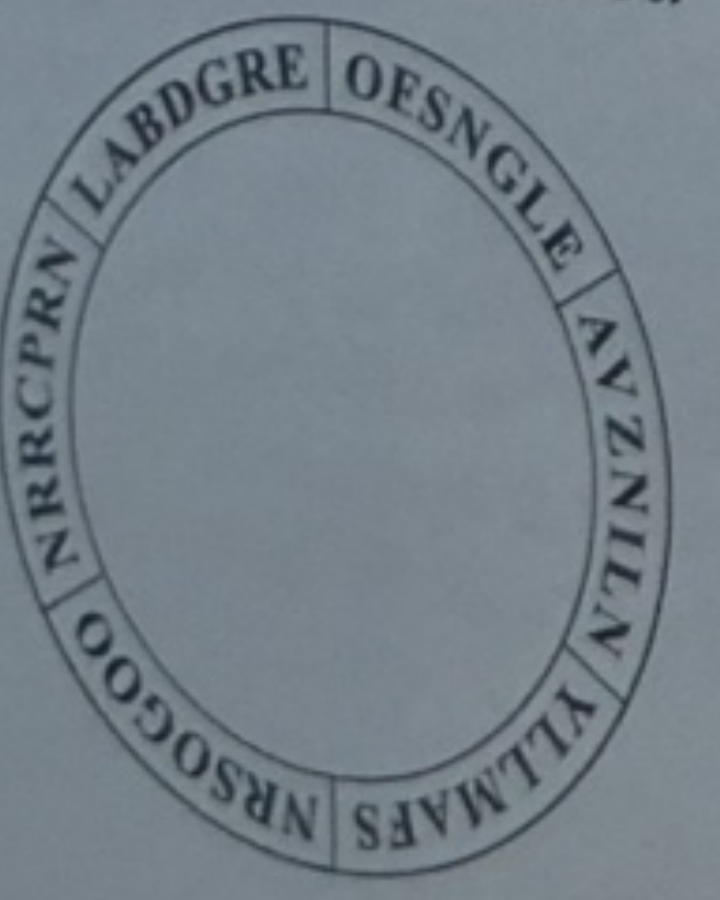
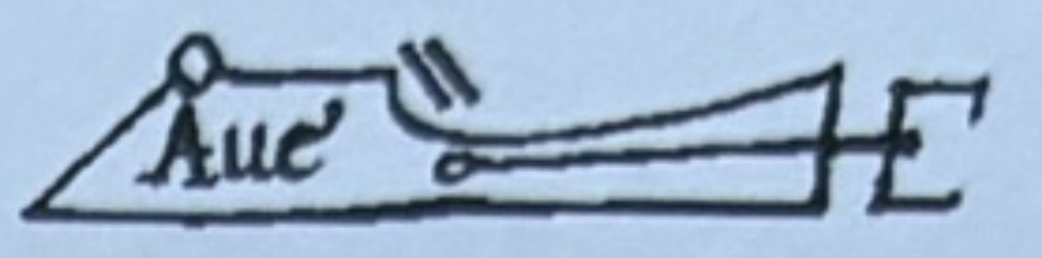
Δ - Note. This diversity of Reckening by 6, and by 7, I can not yet well reconcyle. ---------------





King BOBOGEL - Appeared in a black velvet coat: And his hose close rownd hose, with velvet upperstocks: overlayde with gold lace: on his hed a velvet hatcap: with a black feather in it: with a Cape hanging on one of his sholders: his purse hanging abowt his neck: and so put under his gyrdell, at which hong a gylt rapier. His beard was long: he had pantefles & pynsons. And he sayd, I weare these robes not in respect of my self, but of my government: &c.

Prince BORNOGO - Appeared in a red Robe, with a Gold Cerclet on his hed: He shewed his Seale, and sayde, This it is.

Ministers: 42: - Seven of the Ministers are apparayled like Bobogel the king: sagely and gravely. All the rest are allmost ruffen or royster like. Som are like to be men and wemen: for in the forepart they seamed wemen; and in the bakpart men, by theyr apparayle: And they were the last 7. They daunsed, lept, & kissed. They cam afterward into a Circle: the Sage & the rest: But the Sage stand all togither.

The first of the Sage lift up his hand a loft, and sayd.

> Faciamus secundum voluntatem Dei: Ille Deus noster, est verè Nobilis et æternus.

He pluckt up his right fote, and under it appered an L. & of the rest in like manner, appered these letters or names.

·1· The first 7 grew all togither in a flame of fyre, and so sonk down into the Transparent fyry Globe of the new world.
·2· The second 7 fell down like drops of Mettall.
·3· The Third 7 Clasp togither, & fall down in a thik smoke
·4· The 4th Seven, ioyne togither, and vanish like drops of water.
·5· The fifth 7, fall down like a storme of haile.
·6· The last vanished away.

At an other tyme, they cam (being called by King Carm.) all 42: bringing a rownd Table over their heds flat wise: and then they layd it down & stode abowt it: the letters being as before.

Oratio, ad Deum, singulis diebus, tribus vicibus, ter dicenda.

Ô Almighty, Æternall, the True and living God: Ô King of Glory: Ô Lord of Hoasts: O thow, the Creator of Heaven, and Erth, and of all things visible and Invisible: Now, (even now, at length,) Among other thy manifold mercies used, and to be used, toward me, thy Simple Servant Iohn, Dee, I most humbly beseche the, in this my present petition to have mercy uppon me, to have pitie uppon me, to have Compassion uppon me: Who, faithfully and sincerely, of long time, have sowght among men, in Earth: And allso, by prayer, (full oft, and pitifully,) have made Sute unto thy Divine Ma^{tie} for the obteyning of some convenient portion of True Knowledg and Understanding of thy lawes, and Ordonances, established in the Natures and propreties of thy Creatures: By which Knowledg, Thy Divine Wisdome, Powre and Goodnes, (on thy Creatures bestowed, and to them imparted,) being to me made manifest, might abundantly instruct, furnish, and allure me, (for the same,) incessantly to pronownce thy praises, to render unto the, most harty thanks, to avaunce thy true honor, and to wynne unto thy Name, some of thy due Maiesticall Glorie, among all people, and for ever. And, whereas, it hath pleased the, (O God,) of thy infinite Goodnes, by thy faithfull, and holy Spirituall Messagers, to deliver unto me, long since, (throwgh the eye, and eare of E.K.) An orderlie forme, and manner of Exercise HEPTARCHICAL: How, (to thy Honor and Glory, and the Cumfort of my owne poore sowle, and of others thy faithfull servants.) I may, at all tymes, use very many of thy good Angels, theyr Cownsailes and helps; according to the propreties of such their Functions, and Offices, as to them, by thy Divine Powre, wisdome and Goodnes, is assigned, and limited: (Which Orderly forme, and manner of Exercise, Vntyll even now, I never fownd so urgent Opportunitie, and extream Necessitie, to apply my self unto,) Therefore, I thy poore, and Simple Servant, do, most humbly, hartylie, and faithfully beseche thy Divine Maiestie, most lovingly and fatherly to favor: and by thy Divine Beck to furder this my present industrie and endevour to Exercise my self, according to the foresaid orderly forme and manner:

And, Now, (At length, but not to late) for thy dearly beloved Sonne IESVS CHRIST his sake, (ô Heavenly Father,) to graunt allso unto me this blessing, and portion of thy heavenly Graces: That thow wilt, furthwith, enhable me, make me apt, and Acceptable, (in body Sowle, and Spirit,) to enioye allwayes the Holy and frendely Conversation, with the Sensible, playne, full, and perfect Help, (in word and dede,) of thy Mighty, wise, and Good Spirituall Messagers and Ministers Generally: And, Namely, of Blessed Michaël, Blessed Gabriël, Blessed Raphaël, and Blessed Vriel: And, allso Especially, of all those, which do appertaine, unto the HEPTARCHICAL Mysterie: Isagogically, (as yet,) and very breifly, unto me declared: under the Method of Seven Mighty Kings; and their Seven faithfull and Princely Ministers, with their Subiects, and Servants, to them belonging. And in this thy great Mercie, and Grace, on me bestowed, and to me Confirmed, (Ô Almighty God,) thow shalt, (to the great cumfort of thy faithfull Servants,) approve, to thy very enemies, and myne, the Truth and certaintie of thy manifold most mercifull promises, heretofore, made unto me: And that Thow, arte the True and Almighty God, Creator of Heaven and Earth, (uppon whome, I do Call: and in whome, I put all my trust,) And thy Ministers, to be the True, and faithfull Angels of light: which have, hitherto, principally, and according to thy Divine Providence, dealt with us: And, allso, I, thy poore, and simple Servant, shall, than, In, and By the, be better hable to serve the, according to thy well pleasing: to thy Honor and Glory: Yea, even in these most miserable, and lamentable Dayes. Graunt, ôh graunt, Ô our Heavenly Father, graunt this, (I pray the,) for thy onely begotten Sonne IESVS CHRIST, his sake: Amen, Amen, Amen.

Liber 8^{us}

(from British Library MS. Sloane 3189)

EARLHAM COLLEGE LIBRARY

This writing begining (not at Arney vah &c, but) at Oxar varmol &c, in the 2d Page of the first leaf of the famous Book shown in the stone w^{ch} consisteth of 49 lines or Rows, & every Row of 49 words or letters, the first 40 of this Page have a word in every little square, w^{ch} could not wel be contained in the little Cells of a square Table in this Book. - Therfore they are writ thus as large as you see, But the 9 last Rows of this Page had but one letter a piece & are accordingly set down at the end hereof, pag. 5.

All the other leaves of that Book had but a single letter in each little square & So they are set down as here after follows in this Book, - Vide l. 5 MS pag. 142, 143 &c.

The first Page of that first leaf is not (as it ought to be) all transcribed here before this 2d Page save only the 49, or last Row begining (Arney vah, &c) But they may be seen (& if thought fit copied out thence) in 1^{o}. 5to MS p.150, 151 &c.

APPENDICES

I. DEE'S EUROPEAN JOURNEY

All of the places listed here will be found on the map, including Fureden/Fure, which I haven't been able to identify. FENTON identifies this town as Neuhaus at the mouth of the Elbe, but I haven't been able to confirm this. Until confirmation, I have suggested a possible alternative: Verden (pronounced ferden), just southeast of Bremen. The problem then being: why did Dee head north from Bremen (Breme) to Osterholz (Ostarhold)? This section of Dee's journey—from Bremen to Hamburg—requires further clarification.

PLACE NAMES GIVEN BY DEE	MODERN NAME WITH SOME ALTERNATIVES	DATE OF ARRIVAL	DATE OF DEPARTURE
Names appear in chronological order, with present-day country headings (in bold capital letters), subdivided into regions (in capital letters) as given by Dee.	The first name is the modern spelling (unless otherwise stated) as used in the relevant country. Some additional names are derived from ASH 487/488. (E) = English; (G) = German; (P) = Polish; (Cz) = Czech; (L) = Latin.	From 9 Aug 1584 – 29 November 1589 (outlined by a black border), dates are recorded using the Gregorian calendar, introduced in 1582 (adopted in Britain in 1752). In Dee's time this was ten days ahead of the Julian calendar of which it replaced.
ENGLAND
Mortlake/Mortlak	Mortlake (Dee sets off on the first leg of his European journey)		21 Sep 1583

II. THE NINETY-ONE PARTS OF THE EARTH

These place names first appear in Dee's Libri Septimi, Pars Quarta (Book XI), and were later gathered with additional information in Liber Scientiæ, Auxilii et Victoriæ Terrestris (Book XXII; see also the table at the end of this appendix).

The boundaries represented on these maps can only be approximate, since in many cases no clearly defined boundary can be said to have existed. The modern notion of a sovereign nation state with internationally accepted and well-defined borders postdates the period under consideration. Therefore, wherever possible, compromises have been made in order to prevent overlaps. Some additional names have been added for clarity. The map on which the location in question can be found is indicated within square brackets near the beginning of each entry.

1. Egypt [4 & 5]. "a great water long & narrow, reddish". Basically the same as modern Egypt.

2. Syria [1 & 2]. The Roman province of Syria was divided into two parts: Syria Phœnice in the southwest, which included coastal Phœnicia and a large desert region west of the mountains—this is our present entry, as Phœnice is listed separately (see 62); and Concava Syria (see 66), being a large region defined as north and east Syria.

3. Mesopotamia [1 & 2]. (>Greek "[the land] between the rivers"): "a very fine land & region in which appered a great city". The region between the Tigris and Euphrates north of the Persian Gulf, extending from Baghdad where the two rivers come closest to the upper reaches of the Euphrates in the Taurus Mountains. Mesopotamia constitutes a large part of what is now known as Iraq.

Map 1 – Asia Minor (Anatolia)

4. Cappadocia [1 & 2]. "a large portion of the erth, wherin appered beares, a great river from a hill going into the sea with three mowthes". Ancient district in east central Anatolia just north of the Taurus Mountains.

5. Tuscia [4]. "by Italie". Tuscany/Etruria, lying along the west coast of Italy. The name is derived from an Etruscan tribe. Tuscia came into use under the Roman Empire in the third century AD.

6. Parva Asia [1 & 4]. (>Latin "Asia Minor"). Anatolia or Asia Minor, also known as Asiatic Turkey.

7. Hyrcania [2 & 3]. Ancient region located southeast of the Caspian Sea (now part of Iran). Its capital was Zadracarta (modern Gorgan).

8. Thracia (Thrace) [1 & 4]. To the ancient Greeks, Thrace was that part of the Balkans bounded by the River Danube to the north, the Aegean Sea to the south, the Black Sea and Sea of Marmara to the east, and by the mountains beyond the Vardar River to the west. To the Romans, Thrace was bounded on the north by the Balkan Mountains, and to the west by the Néstos River.

9. Gosmam [6]. "people going into caves of the grownd, & dwelling in caves: they are long hered men, naked, here there apper great hills, and the veynes of the gold mynes appere: the men seme to have baskets of lether. This is one of the places under the pole Arctik". Possibly Alaska or northwest Canada.

10. Thebaidi (Thebes) [4]. There are two options here: first ("$10^{(I)}$" on the map) is the Thebes founded by Cadmus (a Phœnician who, it was said, was descended from the gods), which was the largest and richest city in the region of Bœotia in Greece, and which was originally named Cadmeia in his honour. Bœotia lies north of the eastern part of the Gulf of Corinth. Second ("$10^{(II)}$" on the map) we have Thebes of Egypt, "the hundred-gated" of Homer (actually no gates at all, as it wasn't a walled city). Egypt was divided into Lower, Middle, and Upper Egypt, with Thebes at one time extending over the whole of Upper Egypt (i.e., southern Egypt), the division being at Abydos, northwest of Thebes on the Nile. The city of Thebes is said to have been about six miles square.

11. Parsădal [2 & 3]. "here the sonne shyneth fair". No exact match, but possibly Pasargada or Pasagada, the ancient capital city of Persia (predating Persepolis) founded by Cyrus the Great and named after the ancient Persian tribe of the Pasargadæ.

12. India [3 & 6]. (India intra Gangem, "India within the Ganges", i.e., to the south and west): "people very beastly with Mantelles on theyr sholders: and beasts with long snowts" (obviously elephants).

13. Bactriane (Bactriana or Bactria) [3]. An ancient country lying between the mountains of the Hindu Kush and the Amu Darya (the Oxus River, the southern border of Sogdiana; see 26) in what is now part of Afghanistan, Uzbekistan, and Tajikistan.

Map 2 – The Middle East

14. Cilicia [1]. A region of southern Anatolia bounded to the north and west by the Taurus Mountains, to the east by the Anti-Taurus and to the south by the Mediterranean Sea.

15. Oxiana [3]. This is the surrounding area of the Oxus River (modern Amu-Darya) or the Oxus River Valley. This could also refer to Alexandria-Oxiana (Alexandria on the Oxus River), a city of Sogdiana usually cited as being the city of Termez or Termed (see BRETSCHNEIDER vol. 2 p. 63 and HAZLITT) and which was founded by Alexander the Great. More recent research suggests that the Greek ruins of AI-Khanoon (now largely looted) in northeast Afghanistan, nearly 200 km farther to the east but still on the Oxus River (just northwest of Dasht-e Qaleh) is the lost city of Alexandria-Oxiana. However, not all authorities agree.

16. Numidia [4]. A region of Africa just north of the Sahara and reaching to the Mediterranean coast, the boundaries of which are within those of modern Algeria.

17. Cyprus [1 & 4]. Present-day Cyprus.

18. Parthia [2 & 3]. An ancient land corresponding roughly to the modern region of Khorasan in Iran.

19. Getulia (Gætulia) [4 & 5]. An ancient, loosely defined region of the interior of northwest Africa that was inhabited by nomadic tribes (the Gætuli) during the Roman period. Bounded by the southern slopes of the Atlas Mountains and by the oases in northern Algeria, and from the Aurès Massif in Numidia (see 16) westward as far as the Atlantic Ocean.

20. Arabia [2, 4 & 5]. "here is a great desert, no trees". Arabia Deserta, most of present-day Saudi Arabia.

21. Phalagon [6]. "Δ. – I never herd of it. : E.K. – It is toward the North, where the veynes of gold & such people appere as befor were noted. : Δ. – Groenland as I think". Greenland.

22. Mantiana (Arsissa, Arsene) [2]. This was the name of a lake in Armenia (now Lake Van), but no region of this name is known. However, Matiana was a region of Media extending along the mountains that separate it from Assyria and Armenia, boundaries unclear. Possibly a confusion with Lake Mantiana, which is nearby (see HAZLITT).

23. Soxia. Unknown region. Not, as sometimes given, Transoxiana (i.e., beyond or east of Oxiana, a region of the Oxus River).

24. Gallia [4]. France, but extending farther north to the Rhine.

25. Illyria [4]. Northwest region of the Balkan Peninsula.

Map 3 – Southwest Asia

26. Sogdiana [3]. An ancient country of Central Asia lying between the Oxus and the Iaxartes rivers, both of which flow into the Aral Sea. Its capital city was Maracanda, now Samarkand. To the south is Bactriana (see 13).

27. Lydia [1]. An ancient region of western Anatolia, extending east from the Aegean Sea and occupying the valleys of the Hermus (modern "Gediz") and Cayster (modern "Küçük Menderes") rivers.

28. Caspis (Caspiane, Casperia, Caspia) [2 & 3]. Western coastal area of the Caspian Sea.

29. Germania [4]. Includes Germany, Poland, etc., north of the Danube.

30. Trenam [5 & 6]. "Here appere Monkyes. The people have lether coats & no berds: Nal. – These people are not known with you. : Δ. – Are they not in Africa? : Nal. – They be". Unknown African region.

31. Bithynia [1]. An ancient region of northwest Anatolia adjoining the Sea of Marmara, the Bosphorus, and the Black Sea.

32. Græcia [1]. This name would normally be given to ancient Greece, but here it refers to the city of Constantinople (now Istanbul) in Turkey.

33. Licia (Lycia) [1]. An ancient region of southwest Anatolia lying along the Mediterranean coast between Caria and Pamphylia, and extending inland to the Taurus Mountains.

34. Onígap [6]. "E.K. – Here appere handsom men. : Nal. – These be those beyond Hispaniola. : E.K. – It is a low cuntry. : Nal. – It is beyond Giapan [Japan]. : Δ. – Than it is in that land which I use to call Atlantis. : Nal. – They stretch mor nere the west. There are 35 kingdomes in it". Possibly the Yucatan Peninsula of Mexico.

35. Greater India [6]. (India extra Gangem, "India beyond the Ganges", i.e., to the east): Extending to Vietnam and all countries on the mainland south of China.

36. Orchenii [2]. Greek name for the people of southern Chaldea in the marshland region of the Persian Gulf, known for their astronomical knowledge. Their home city was Orchœ or Urchoa, usually called Uruk. The ancient city of Ur can be found nearby (see HAZLITT).

37. Achaia (Achaea) [4]. A region of southern Greece encompassing the whole of the Peloponnese and farther northward. The modern region of Achæa extends along the north coast of the Peloponnese.

38. Armenia [2]. Armenia's boundaries have varied considerably over the centuries, and they once extended into the northeast of Turkey, Syria, and Azerbaijan.

39. Cilicia/Nemrodiana [6]. "Nal. – You never knew this Cilicia. This is Cilicia where the Children of Nemrod dwell. Yt is up in the Mowntayns beyond Cathay". This can only be northeast Russia.

40. Paphlagonia [1]. An ancient region of Anatolia adjoining the Black Sea and bounded by Bithynia (see 31) in the west, Cappadocia (see 4) in the east, and Phrygia (see 89) in the south. In the fourth century AD, Paphlagonia became a separate Roman province.

41. Phaziána (Phasiane) [2]. A region of Colchis along the River Phasis (see 49).

42. Chaldei (Chaldæi) [2]. The people of Chaldea (see 72) in southern Babylonia, at the head of the Persian Gulf.

43. Itergi [6]. "Here appere woods, water, and fayr towns, but the people are yellow tawny. They are to the sowth of the last Ciliciens". Possibly northern China or Mongolia.

44. Macedonia [4]. This is the ancient kingdom of Macedon, which extended its rule northward into the Balkan Peninsula.

45. Garamantica [4 & 5]. The Romans conquered the Garamantes (the people of Garamantica) in 19 BC. and annexed their country, which the Romans called Phazania (now Fezzan), not to be confused with Phaziána (see 41). Today, Fezzan occupies a large part of southwest Libya.

46. Saromatia/Sauromatica (Sarmatia/Sauromatia) [4 & 6]. Eastern Europe and European Russia.

47. Æthiopia [5]. Ancient Ethiopia was just south of Egypt, which today is called Sudan. Present-day Ethiopia (also called Abyssinia) is south of Sudan. "Ethiopia Interior" was also a name given to southern Africa, as the name "Libya Interior" was given to northern Africa.

48. Fiacim [6]. "E.K. – Now he sheweth by the North pole & the great mowntayn. : [Nal.?] Here be 7 kingdoms: theyr Chief cyte is called Fiacim, all that are of that kings cownsyle are Astronomers. The kings name that now governeth is Gapsacar". The great mountain refers to an imaginary mountain that was said to exist at the North Pole and which appears on early maps of the region.

49. Colchica (Colchis) [2]. An ancient region at the eastern end of the Black Sea south of the Caucasus, in the western part of modern Georgia. It largely consisted of the valley of the River Phasis (modern Rioni).

50. Cireniaca (Cyrenaica) [4]. Coastal region of northeast Africa, corresponding to northeast Libya.

Map 5 – Africa

51. Nasamonia [4]. This refers to the region occupied by the nomadic people known as the Nasamones, which stretched along the coast of what is present-day eastern Libya.

52. Carthago [4]. The city of Carthage (Tunis) in modern Tunisia.

53. Coxlant [3]. "A great place appereth covered abowt with fyre, it appereth very estward. It is on high grownd. There come 4 rivers out of it, one east, an other west, an other north & an other sowth". This is Paradise, or the Garden of Eden, spoken of in Genesis. Now because Genesis mentions four rivers, including the Tigris and the Euphrates, and also Assyria, Paradise was apparently located in this region (see Map 2). However, this region is not particularly far to the east, nor is it on high ground. An interesting alternative comes from Buddhist and Hindu tradition: Manasarovar, a very ancient spiritual region of the Himalayas in Tibet, CHINA (far to the east and the roof of the world), in the centre of which is the sacred mountain Kailash, traditionally regarded as the centre of the world. At the southern foot of Kailash are two lakes, Lake Rakas ("demon"), resembling a crescent (the Moon), and Lake Manas ("consciousness"), forming a circle (the Sun), from which grows the sacred Jambu tree; and radiating out from this region are four mighty rivers, the Brahmaputra to the east, the Sutlej to the west, the Karnali to the south, which joins the Ganges, and the Indus to the north, which then veers to the west. "According to Hindu tradition it was Brahma himself who created Manasarovar and the divine Jambu tree—though invisible to human eyes—grows in its centre. ... and it is said that due to the fruits of this divine tree the waters of Manasarovar are turned into a life-giving elixir. The Tree of Life in the Lake of Supreme Consciousness ... how reminiscent of the Tree of Knowledge in the biblical story of the Paradise". —Lama Govinda, The Way of the White Clouds.

54. Idumea (Idumæa, or Edom) [2]. An area of southern Palestine.

55. Parstavia. "Δ. – I know it not". Unknown region.

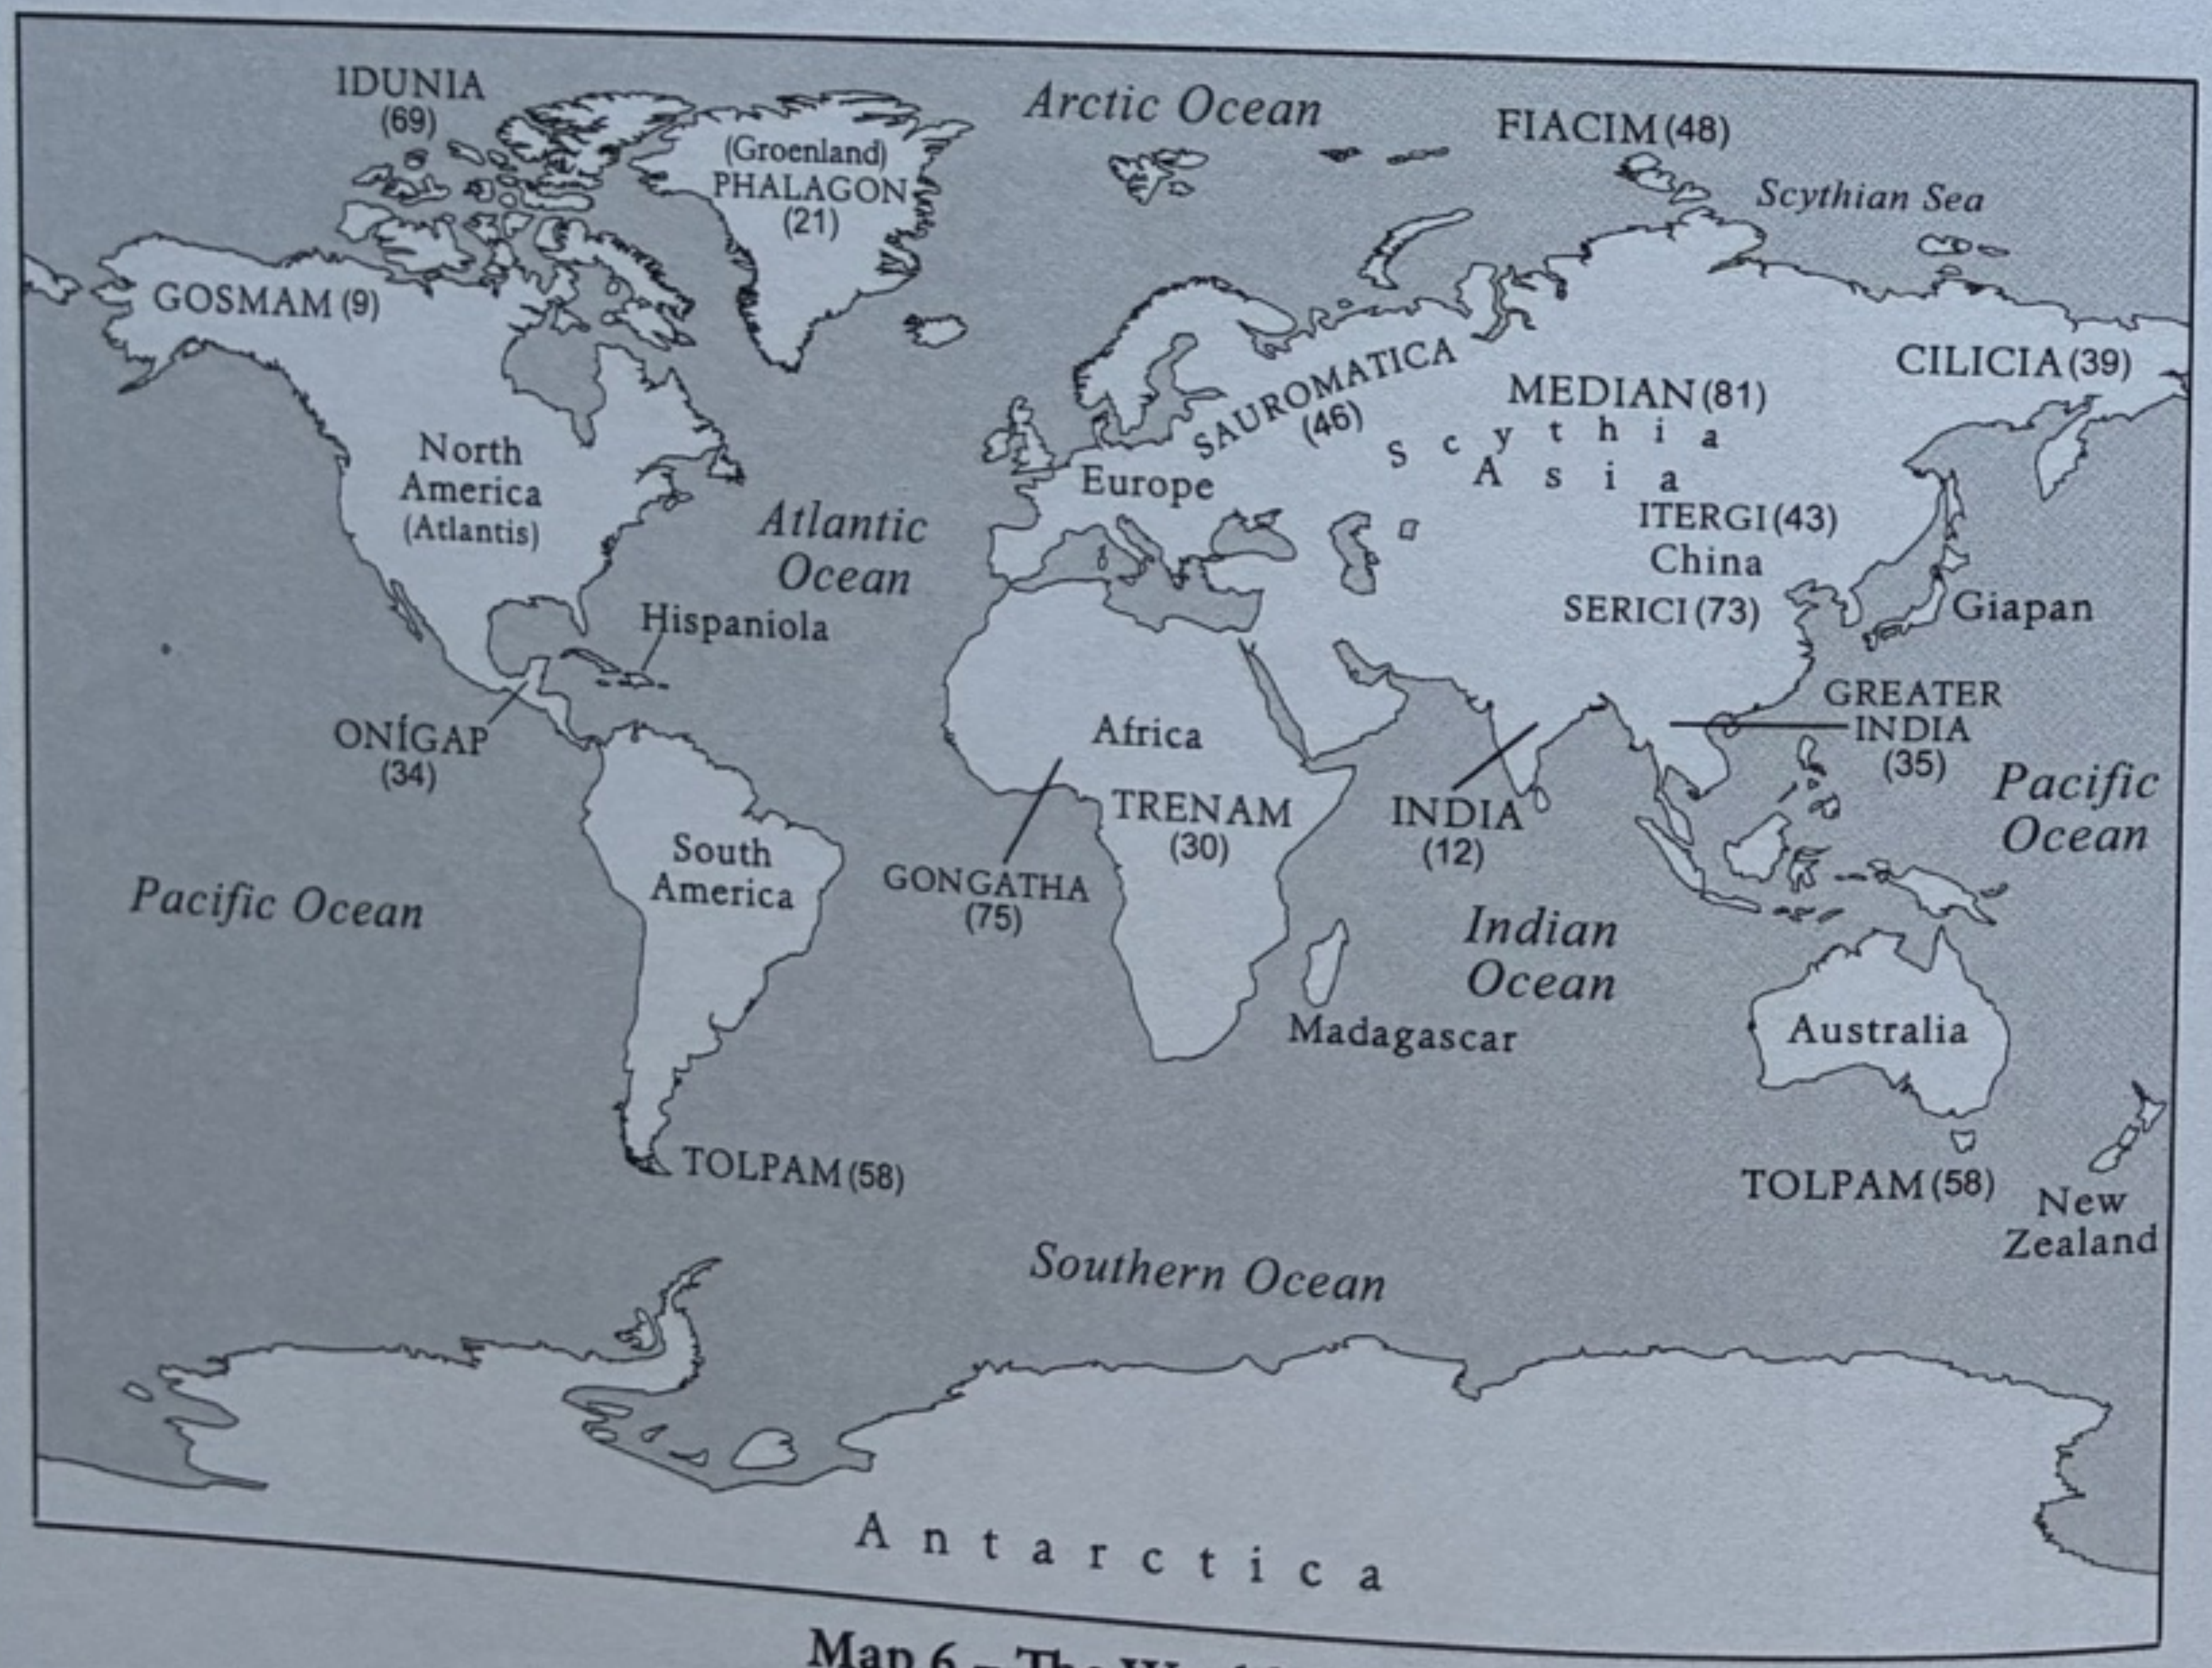
56. Celtica [4]. This would normally be Gaul, or Gallia (see 24), but according to Nalvage: "It is that which you call flandria the low cuntry". That is Flanders, a region encompassing the northwestern part of modern Belgium and parts of France and the Netherlands.

57. Vinsan. "E.K. – Here apper men with talens lyke lyons. : Nal. – They be very divells. There are five Iles of them. These be they that can dwell in any part of the erth, & are called Pilosi. Nothing differth them but in that they have bodyes". Unknown region.



Map 6 – The World

58. Tolpam [6]. "E.K. – Under the Sowth pole: Here appere little men with long berds, theyr bodyes as childrens bodyes. : Nal. – There dwelleth the wunderfull Emperor of the World, and the wunderfull City of the World: Here are an hundred and 12 Kingdomes. This Citie is a hundred forty six leagues abowt. : Δ. – You understand two english myles for a league, as in France? : Nal. – I. There dwelleth the true generation of Cham". This could be any southern region, the far south of South America, Australia, or New Zealand, possibly South Africa or even Antarctica.

59. Carcedonia (Carchedonia or Karchedonia) [4]. Carchedon was the Greek name for Carthage, Latin Carthago (see 52), therefore Carchedonia would imply a greater area as shown on the map (Tunisia).

EARLHAM COLLEGE LIBRARY

60. Italia [4]. Italy.

61. Brytania [4]. Britain; also includes Ireland, Denmark, and Iceland.

62. Phenices (Phœnicia) [2]. Roman coastal province of Syria, extending through Lebanon and Israel.

63. Comaginen (Commagene) [1 & 2]. A region at the northern extreme of ancient Syria (modern south-central Turkey) bounded by Cilicia to the west and Cappadocia to the north, with its eastern boundary on the Euphrates River. Under the Romans it became a province of Syria.

64. Apulia (Puglia) [4]. A region of southeast Italy bordering the Adriatic Sea in the east, the Ionian Sea to the southeast and the Strait of Otranto and Gulf of Taranto in the south. In ancient times, only the northern part of the region was called Apulia, the southern region being known as Calabria.

65. Marmarica [4]. Coastal region lying in the northwest corner of present-day Egypt.

66. Concava Syria (Cœle-Syria, "hollow Syria") [1 & 2]. The Roman province of Syria was divided into two parts: Cœle-Syria, being a large region defined as north and east Syria; and Syria Phœnice in the southwest, including coastal Phœnicia and a large desert region east of the mountains.

67. Gebal (Gebal or Jubayl) [2]. The Greek Byblos. An ancient coastal city of Lebanon.

68. Elam [2 & 3]. Also called Susiana, an ancient country now in southwest Iran and approximately equivalent to the modern region of Khuzestan.

69. Idunia [6]. "Nal. – It is beyond Groenland" (Greenland). Probably northern Canada.

70. Media [2 & 3]. An ancient country of northwest Iran generally corresponding to the modern regions of Azerbaijan (not the country), Kurdistan, and parts of Kermanshah.

71. Arriana [2 & 3]. An extensive region covering large parts of Iran, Afghanistan, and Pakistan.

72. Chaldea/Chaldæa [2]. "Δ. – I beseche you, what differeth this Chaldea from Chaldei before? : Nal. – You shall finde the difference of it, in practise". An ancient land in southern Babylonia at the head of the Persian Gulf.

73. Serici/Sericipopuli (Seres) [6]. A people of central Asia which includes a large part of China (Serica), more usually called the Seres. Most of the information about Serica comes from early traders along the Silk Road, who would terminate their journey at Shensi (Shaanxi province) in China.

74. Persia [2 & 3]. Shown on the map is the ancient Persia or Persis (now Fars). Persia's borders have changed greatly over time, extending to the east as far as the Indus and west to the Aegean Sea, but these areas are covered by other regions in this list.

75. Gongatha [5 & 6]. "Towards the South Pole". Possibly Gongola, a region of Nigeria in which are the Gongola Basin and the Gongola River. Otherwise, somewhere in southern African or perhaps Madagascar.

76. Gorsin [2 & 3]. "Beares and lions here". This is possibly the ancient kingdom of Corasm (Chorasm, Qarasmiah), located just to the east of the Caspian Sea, to the north of Persia, and south of the Aral Sea, centred around the Aral Sea delta region. This would roughly correspond to Margiana and perhaps a bit farther north. Alternatively, the region of Khorasan, located just to the south of Corasm, extending into eastern Iran (where can be found Khorasan province) and as far west as the Hindu Kush mountains. The name has various spellings (e.g., "Khwarezm", "Chorasam", "Chorasmia", etc.). Bears and lions would have roamed this area which have long since been hunted to extinction in the region. The Asiatic Lion now survives only in Gujarat, northwest India.

77. Hispania [4]. The Roman name for the Iberian Peninsula (i.e., Spain and Portugal).

78. Pamphylia (Pamphilia) [1]. An ancient region of southern Anatolia, between Cilicia (see 14) and Lycia (see 33), which, under the Romans, extended much farther to the north.

79. Oäcidi [4]. This could well be the Oases region of western Egypt, which was well known to ancient geographers.

80. Babylon [2]. This was the ancient capital city of Babylonia, one of the most famous cities of antiquity, located in southeast Mesopotamia.

81. Median [6]. "E.K. – It is much north ward. : Nal. – Theyr are two Iles envyronned with an arme of the Scythian Sea, which goeth in at Maspi. : Δ. – I remember of people called Arimaspi". Herodotus mentions the Maspii, one of several an ancient Persian tribes. However this is probably not relevant since the Maspi mentioned by Nalvage would seem to be farther north, and is clearly a place name. The Arimaspi mentioned by Dee, were, according to Herodotus, a one-eyed people of Scythia, and were constantly fighting griffins, being the guardians of vast quantities of gold said to be found in the region.

Milton writes in Paradise Lost:

> As when a Gryfon through the Wilderness
> With winged course o'er Hill or moarie Dale,
> Pursues the ARIMASPIAN, who by stelth
> Had from his wakeful custody purloind
> The guarded Gold.

Some would place the Arimaspi in the Altai Mountains in western Mongolia, others in the Ural Mountains of Russia. The arm of the Scythian Sea mentioned by Nalvage, as shown on some sixteenth century maps would seem to correspond roughly to the entrance of the river Ob, just east of the Urals. Maspi remains unlocated, but probably somewhere towards the mouth of the river Ob, which is near near the northern Urals. This would suggest perhaps that Maspi was a town or village of the people known as Arimaspi. This could mean that Median was perhaps a regional name covering the same area, its extent being unknown. All of this is very speculative.

82. Idumian. Unknown region.

83. Fælix Arabia [5]. (>Latin "fertile Arabia"). In ancient geography, the comparatively fertile region of southwest and southern coastal regions of Arabia, which contrasted with the barren central and northern Arabia known as Arabia Deserta.

84. Metagonitidim [4]. The region of the Metagonitæ, a people inhabiting the coastal region of northwest Mauritania (see 91), now northern Morocco (see HAZLITT).

85. Assyria [2]. Assyria became one of the great empires of the ancient Middle East. It was located, largely, in what is now northern Iraq, and was once a dependency of Babylonia (see 80).

86. Affrica [4]. "Africa was known to the Romans, who received it from the Carthaginians, and applied it first to that part of Africa with which they became first acquainted, namely, the part about Carthage (Tunisia), and afterwards to the whole continent". —Dictionary of Greek and Roman Geography.

87. Bactriani [3]. This would seem to be the people of Bactriane (see 13).

88. Afnan [5]. "Here appere people with one eye in theyr hed, seming to be in theyr brest, toward the æquinoctiall". Sometimes incorrectly given as Afran, referring perhaps to the Aphricerones of Ptolemy. Probably in Africa toward the equator.

89. Phrygia [1]. Ancient region in central Anatolia.

90. Creta [4]. Present-day Crete.

91. Mauritania [4]. Not the present-day Mauritania, but the northeast coastal region of Africa occupying part of Morocco and Algeria.

TABLE OF THE NINETY-ONE PARTS OF THE EARTH

This information has been collected from Book X, compared with Book XXIV and grouped into sevens as given in Book X.

With regard to the divine names, the relevant column first gives the original name from Book X, then (where relevant) Dee's alternative spelling from Book XXII, centred in the column and marked by a star "✱". This is followed (where relevant) by the name as it would be produced from the reformed Tables (as found on page XXIV-4–5) marked by a pointing hand "☞".

On pages XXIV-6–7 can be found the sigils for these names. There are twenty-two sigils on each Table, giving a total of eighty-eight sigils. The letters of the name Paraoan are spread over all four Tables. Add to these the three names found in the Black Cross (this includes the "L" of "LEXARPH", found in the top right Table) and we reach a total of ninety-two names, not ninety-one as we would expect. The extra name is "LAXDIXI" or "LAXDIZI" (not to be confused with the "LAZDIXI" found in the fifth Ayre). This name is not mentioned in the manuscripts and remains a mystery.

One of the main problems with the reformed Tables is with the bottom left Table, sixth row up from the bottom, which originally appears as "ROCANICHIASOM" but which was changed to "OCANICHIASOMT", the "R" falling off the left end and the letter "T" being added to the far right, changing the spelling of every name that crosses it, as the letters shift one place to the left (indicated here by bold type). Two of the names that Dee lists cross this line, but Dee has not changed them to conform to the reformed Table. One of them ("BAZCHLM") would seem to be an error, the other ("ORCANIR") conforms to the original Table. Perhaps all this indicates that Dee had problems accepting this change. Alternatively, we could adjust the sigils and retain the spellings, but then the letter "R" (fallen off the left) of "PARAOAN" would disappear, it being replaced with the "o" of "ORPANIB". It could be replaced with the (now redundant) "t" on the right hand side, but this, to me, is all wrong, and as these names and their sigils were recorded at different times, yet fully agree, they are almost certainly correct. I would suggest that the shifting of this line one place to the left is Kelley's error, and should be ignored.

[1] Dee originally wrote "14960" (the correct figure) for this total, which he changed for some reason to "15960" (see X-63).

[2] The "N" of "GENADOB" (or "GENADOL") is shown as a majuscule "N" in the Table (see XXIII-5), when it should clearly be a minuscule "n", as it doesn't form the initial letter of any name.

[3] Italy was originally assigned here (see XI-64 and XI-96). It has been moved to the next seven, but in the same relative position.

[4] Brytania was originally assigned to this place (see XI-64 and XI-96). It has been moved to the next seven, but in the same relative position.

[5] The twelfth angel was changed from the eleventh angel (see X-81).

[6] The eleventh angel was changed from the eighth/second angel. See X-81, where the eighth angel is given near the top and the second angel near the bottom.

[7] The eleventh angel was changed from the twelfth angel (see X-82).

[8] The spelling "Bazchlm" is Dee's mistake: it should be "Lazchim"; or, in the reformed Table, "Lazhiim".

[9] The "L" of "LAZHIIM" (or "BAZCHIM") is shown as a minuscule "l" in the Table (see XXIII-4), when it should be a majuscule "L", as it forms the initial letter of this name.

[10] The "C" of "CRPANIB" (or "ORPANIB") is shown as a minuscule "c" in the Table (see XXIII-4), when it should be a majuscule "C", as it forms the initial letter of this name.

[11] No total given in the diaries (see XXI-31).

[12] The twelfth angel was changed from the fifth angel (see X-90).

[13] No total given in the diaries (see XXI-32).

III. GAZETTEER

Numbers in square brackets immediately following an entry refer to appendix II "Ninety-One Parts of the Earth". Names in capital letters are countries, regions, lakes, and rivers; all other names are towns, unless stated otherwise. Names are followed by the modern name, where known, or its correct spelling. Occasionally Dee uses a Latin place name in an inflected form, the nominative form being given here in brackets. It would seem that, in some cases, Dee spelled names as he heard them, not knowing the correct spelling.

Symbols used:

"translation"	Editorial translations are shown in italic text, immediately following an entry.
"word"	Dee's translations or other quotations from the manuscripts are shown in upright text.
>origin	Origin of a word or phrase.
..../....	Alternative spellings are separated by a forward slash.
WORD	Cross-references are indicated by small capitals.
word*	Spelling error, immediately followed by the correct spelling within square brackets.

ACHAIA [37] Achæa, region of southern Greece encompassing the whole of the Peloponnese and somewhat farther to the north.

IV. Glossary of Archaic and Obscure Words

Some of these words are now obsolete (e.g., "forsooth"), whilst others might be used in a different way than we would today (e.g., "ghostly"), but with the majority of them it is just the spelling which is archaic and (at first) almost unrecognisable (e.g., "frise" = "freeze"). This list is not complete, but the remainder consists of minor spelling differences which hopefully shouldn't cause any difficulties (e.g., the letter "e" being appended to many words, etc.).

Many of these words occur only once in this work, others may occur many times, but in almost every case a reference to its first occurrence is given here. Some words have more than one meaning: these are either listed separately or have been noted (see, e.g., "yt"). Alternative meanings do not appear where they agree with modern conventions (e.g., "simple", meaning a medicinal plant, is listed, but "simple" used as an adjective is not). Some words are in use today (e.g., "anon"), but as they are not particularly common I have included them.

Immediately following a word will be found its more usual spelling in italics (but still possibly archaic) where relevant, followed by its meaning, if necessary; some words require no further explanation (e.g., "cifre" = "cipher"). Many of these words can be found in the Oxford English Dictionary.

V. BRIEF BIOGRAPHICAL GUIDE

The following guide lists all of the people (including groups, tribes, etc.) mentioned by Dee—some of which are famous in their own right, whilst of others we know very little or nothing. Some of these names are of biblical origin, and a few others are only mentioned in parables. Only the barest outline is given here, but enough to enable the reader to begin further research if required. Bold names are as they appear in the manuscripts, sometimes followed by other relevant information as recorded by Dee (within double quotes).

Symbols used:

"translation"	Editor's translations are shown in italic text, immediately following an entry.
"word"	Relevant quotations from the manuscripts, shown in upright text.
>origin	Origin of a word or phrase.
..../....	Alternative spellings are separated by a forward slash.
~	The tilde is used in some subentries; the main entry is to be substituted here.

Abano, Petri de Pietro d'Abano, or Peter of Abano (c.1250–c.1316), supposed author of the Heptameron or Magical Elements. Abano, or Abano Terme as it is now known, is in northeast Italy, 9 km southwest of Padua.

Abraham Biblical: first of the Hebrew patriarchs.

Abyram, Iudg of Abiram, biblical: one of three who conspired to overthrow the authority of Moses, and upon whom God inflicted an awful punishment.

Adam Biblical: first man.

Adam of Newhowse Lord Chancellor (d.1596), adviser to Emperor RUDOLF II.

Agricola, Georgius Georg Bauer (1494–1555), German scholar and scientist known as "the father of mineralogy" and author of De Re Metallica – "On the Property of Metals".

Agrippa, Cornelius Heinrich Cornelius Agrippa von Nettesheim (1486–1535), court secretary to the Emperor Charles V of Antwerp, German philosopher, physician, occult scholar, etc., best known for his work De Occulta Philosophia.

Albert, Erl of Swatzenburg First mentioned in 1172, the Schwarzenbergs were, and still are, one of the noble families of the Kingdom of Bohemia; their power base was in Bohemia and Moravia where large estates of theirs still remain today. Nothing found on Albert.

Zyrom One of nine prophets called upon by an unknown angel on 20 March 1584.

VI. AN EXAMINATION OF JOHN DEE'S 48 CLAVES ANGELICÆ

These Keys follow Dee's 48 Claves Angelicæ, but laid out in tabular form with each word being assigned a number (first column). Each word has been checked against the original recording, where Dee has often given more information: some relating to specific occurrences of a word (not always easy to judge), others clearly applicable to every occurrence (e.g., Key 3, word 1, "micma"). The reader should make his/her own judgement on this.

All of Dee's notes from the original recording have been enclosed within square brackets and quotation marks just beneath the corresponding word or letter, which is underlined. Editorial annotations and additions appear in the same way, but without the quotation marks.

The second column gives the Angelic words in bold type, as originally dictated (see appendix X). Any differences between these and Dee's 48 Claves Angelicæ have been noted. I have separated some of these where they were joined, but only where this was safe to do so. Other words I have kept together because they appear to be pronounced slightly differently than when pronounced individually. The note "possible compound word" indicates a word that cannot reliably be separated into two or more words (see at the end of appendix VII for a definition of the compound word).

The third column gives the Angelic words as found in 48 Claves Angelicæ, including Dee's accents. This requires some clarification: it is often said that this is of Dee's own invention. Now this is clearly quite false, as examples can be found scattered throughout the Keys and other Angelic words where Kelley dictated to Dee what he saw and heard (e.g., in IX-55 the letter "i" in "amiran" "is skarse heard"; or in XI-55, the cacodæmon "xoy", where Dee writes "I note this pronunciation", etc.). For other pronunciations of a particular word, see appendix X "Complete Angelic Lexicon". Notes added here refer (in the main) to the original recording of this particular instance of the word. Note that where a page reference is given in superscript immediately following a word, this refers to the separation of the word into syllables only. A few notes are found within Dee's 48 Claves Angelicæ, these are shown in brackets immediately following the word concerned (e.g., (a) in the First Key, word 72)

The final column gives the English translation. Text within curly brackets indicates an error, or a translation which does not appear to have any corresponding Angelic word(s).

Note that the original recording of the last two words of Key 13, the whole of Keys 14 and 15, and the first twelve words of Key 16 are now lost. These folios were also missing when Casaubon was preparing his edition of Dee's work, where a number of pages appear out of sequence, as the complete Keys were, at that time, unknown. Note that Dee was instructed to reproduce the last fourteen words of Key 1 and add them to the end of Keys 11 to 18 (Key 12 was slightly modified), although for some reason Dee omits the second of these fourteen words from all but Key 11 (but note that Key 12 does not require this word).

In compiling these Keys a number of other versions have been consulted, namely those found in REGARDIE, TURNER EM, JAMES, CROWLEY and LEITCH. Surprisingly, the most accurate, but by no means perfect, is REGARDIE (which also includes some corrections to 48 Claves Angelicæ). The others introduce more errors than they solve, take too many liberties with spellings, and add extra words to the text (e.g., JAMES has ninety-two angelic words for the first Key, when it should only have eighty-six, as stated by Nalvage in Book IX-33.

No doubt LEITCH will be considered authoritative, but his use of the circumflex (representing a long vowel) is a mistake, and should all be substituted by the breve (from the Latin brevis, "short"), being a short vowel (confirmed by Dee (see e.g., IX-20): this error was first noted in another source. There are also a few Angelic words that have been misread. Also bear in mind that, "hoath Iaida" translates as "the true worshipper of the Highest", where Iaida is not simply "the Highest", but "signifyeth, of the highest" (Nalvage, IX-17). Contrastingly, in LEITCH the word "hoath" is translated as "the true worshipper of". There are a number of other similar instances.

In Key 1 some attempt at punctuation or prosodic juncture has been made (here enclosed in brackets). These are: a full point ("."), a vertical ("|") and a solidus ("/"). They were dictated with the Key, and so do not originate from Dee. The precise contextual meaning of these symbols is a matter for the reader to decide.

1:21	HOLQ	hol-q ["as hol-quu": IX-26. The pronunciation of "quu" is often given as "kwa", and is quite literally a "double u". In early printed works this was achieved by printing two "v"s together, but we are here referring to Dee's handwriting, not a printed source. As Dee, clearly writes "uu", we can rule out the pronunciation as "kwa", as I think Dee would have wriiten "kwa", or "qua" avoiding any ambiguity. I would suggest "kwu", or possibly "koo"; note Dee omits a final "a"]	measureth

1:49	FARZM	farzm	you lifted up your voyces
1:50	ZNRZA	Znrza (u?) ["as znurza": IX-23. Dee is unsure of the spelling of this word: see Key 19:167 where it gives "surzas"]	and sware

This section was never translated into English by Dee.

1:51	ADNA	adná	obedience
1:52	GONO	gono	{and} faith
1:53	IADPIL [The word "Iadpil" is, in every published source that I have seen, assigned the meaning "Him", or "to Him", but not according to Dee's tabulation on page IX-29 (see also IX-34 no. 52), which gives "to Him that liveth", also this is probably a compound word as "Iad" = "God" and "pil" = "life" (root of "apila"?). See appendix VII]	Iắdpil	to him that Liveth
1:54	DS	Ds	and [Angelic word "ds" = "which" or "that"]
1:55	HOMTOH (/ – a stroke) ["Homtoh" is always given as two words, including Dee's first recording (IX-22). At the end of "toh" Dee records a stroke ("called virgula") between them, but this is recorded in reverse, placing it at the end of "Hom toh". Usually given as "liveth and triumpheth", but this simply doesn't add up, as the word "liveth" is part of "Iadpil" (see 53 above); also, see IX-29 and IX-34 no. 54, although Dee's numbering does get a little confused in places]	hom-tóh	triumpheth

1:56	SOBA [Probably a word missing here for "beginning", which Dee attaches to "ipam". JAMES inserts "iaod" here, but Nalvage clearly states that this call has eighty-six words (IX-33), whilst JAMES has ninety-two. See IX-34 no. 55, where two English words are assigned here (to "soba") and two to the following word "ipam"]	Soba ["Sobá": IX-21]	Whose {begynning}
1:57	IPAM	Ipam	{begynning} is not,
1:58	VL	lu [The "u" pronounced "yew, wherof bows ar made": IX-20. Dee erroneously gives "lu" here; cf. "uls" in appendix VII]	nor ende

1:62	VEP (/ – a stroke)	vep	as a flame
1:63	ZOMD [LEITCH gives "zomdux", but see IX-19 and 20, where this word is perfectly clear, and also appendix X]	zomd	in the myddst
1:64	POAMAL (· – a point)	Poamal	of your pallace
1:65	OD [This and the preceding word were originally given as a compound word, "poamalsod", or "poamaltod". see appendix VII]	od	and
1:66	BOGPA	bogpa	rayngneth
1:67	AAI	aäi ["The first A may be an A an O or an E": IX-19]	amongst you
1:68	TA	ta	as
1:69	PIAP	piap	the ballance
1:70	PIAMOL (BALTAL) [See IX-15, where "piamol" is crossed out and changed to "baltal", pronounced "bal-ta-ël". Whereas in 48 Claves Angelicae Dee uses "piamol". Judging by the meaning of the word, "baltal" would seem to be correct. Leitch omits the second "a", giving "baltle". It should be written "baltal", with the final "l" sounded as "el" or perhaps "le". This was corrected the same day and not the next, as stated in Leitch. Yet strangely, Dee seems to forget this and uses "piamol" the next day and thereafter]	piamo-l	of righteousness,
1:71	OD	od ["drawing the o long": IX-15]	and
1:72	VOOAN	voöan (a) ["It may be sownded better Vaoan": IX-15. See "Vooan" in appendix X]	truth:

When receiving the English of these Keys, Dee is instructed to repeat these last fourteen words (i.e., from "Zacare" to "Iaida", indicated here by the surrounding box) at the end of Keys 11–18, except that Key 12 has a minor change. This partly answers the question in the note attached to "zacare" 11:38 below.

1:73	ZACARE ["E must come after R but without number" >Nalvage: IX-14. Is this for all occurrences? It is quite likely that the "e" is silent. LEITCH omits this "e"]	ZACARe [Here, Dee makes the final "e" a minuscule, indicating perhaps its silent nature?]	Move
1:74	CA	c-a [XXI-11] ["two syllables": IX-14. "sa": X-13. probably sounded "see-ah"]	therfore

1:78	CICLE	ciclé	the Mysteries
1:79	QAA	q-ä-á [X-46] ["qäá – thre syllables with accent on the last A": IX-13. "q-á-a": X-46]	of your Creation:
1:80	ZORGE	zorge ["of one syllable": IX-13]	be frendely unto me,
1:81	LAP	lap	for
1:82	ZÏRDO	zirdo ["ï": IX-13]	I am
1:83	NOCO	noco	the servant
1:84	MAD	MAD	of the same yo^{r} God,
1:85	HOATH	ho-ath [XXI-11]	the true worshipper
1:86	IAIDA	Iaïda. [This appears as "Iaída" in XXI-12 and "Iaḯda" in XXI-13. Page XI-97 (Key of the 30 Ayres) gives the pronunciation as "Ya-í-da"]	of the Highest.

10:42	*(MA)TORB ["Torb" is how it appears in the manuscript, including the underline (see XI-78), but it is not found in 48 Claves Angelicæ. Page XI-78 is one of several pages that have been trimmed, and a small part of the initial "T" is missing, as are parts of the other marginal notes along this edge, hence the "ma" could have been trimmed off. It's possible that "matorb" (word 58 below), for which, no translation exists, has been inserted into the wrong place. According to the MS. it is to be inserted after the words "om droln". In TFR it appears as "T or B" (probably giving the wrong impression) meaning "with a hundred" which would seem unlikely. The word "matorb" is similar to "matb" ("a thousand")]		with an hundred

There are no Angelic words for this section of the Key. These six lines represent the maximum number of words missing; this is often seen reconstructed, but is unreliable in my opinion. Referring to this section, Leitch makes the following statement, on p. 86 vol. II, "Dee noted that no Angelical had been given in the Key for (all of) those words, so he went back and added 11.16 and 18 (Od) and 11.19 (Noas)". The words referred to in the present listing are: 16, 20, and 21. I can find no record of Dee ever having added any words to this section.

17:21	DAXIL	dax-il	thy loynes
17:22	OD	od	and
17:23	TOATAR	to-á-tar:	Harken.

These last 14 words are repeated from the first Key: see XI*-81 bottom left.*

17:24	ZACARE	ZACAR [As this is repeated from the first Key it should have a final "e" on "zacar"]	Move
17:25	CA [Dee mistakenly omits this word (ca) from his 48 Claves Angelicæ, as does LEITCH, JAMES and others]	c-a [XXI-1] ["sa": X-13. "two syllables": IX-14. probably sounded "see-ah"]	therefore
17:26	OD	od	and
17:27	ZAMRAN	ZAM-RAN [X-46]	shew yo^{r} selves:
17:28	ODO	o-do [X-46]	Open
17:29	CICLE	ci-cle [X-46] ["ciclé": IX-14]	the mysteries
17:30	QAA	Q-ä-á ["QÄÄ' – thre syllables with accent on the last a": IX-13]	of yo^{r} Creation
17:31	ZORGE	zorge, ["of one syllable": IX-13]	Be frendely unto me,
17:32	LAP	lap	for
17:33	ZIRDO	zirdo ["ï": IX-13]	I am
17:34	NOCO	Noco	the servant
17:35	MAD	Mad	of the same your God,
17:36	HOATH	ho-ath [XXI-11]	the true worshipper
17:37	IAIDA	Iaída. [The First Key has "Iaïda". This also appears as "Iaída" in XXI-12. Page XI-97 (Key of the 30 Ayres) gives the pronunciation as "Ya-í-da"]	of the Highest.

THE EIGHTEENTH KEY

Key	Original Angelic Word	Word from Book XXI	Translation from Book XXI
18:1	ILS	Ils	O thow
18:2	MICAOLZ [LEITCH gives "micalzo" here]	Micá-ol-z ["mi-cá-ol-zod": X-56]	mighty
18:3	OLPIRT [LEITCH gives, "ialpirt" (flame) here, believing "olpirt" to be an error, no doubt basing this on XI-95, where we find "al-purt", but see "Notes to Manuscripts" regarding this page. "Olpirt" appears twice in Dee's records, so I think we can safely assume it is correct]	ol-pirt	light
18:4	IALPRG	ial-prg ["yal-purg": X-57]	{and} burning flame
18:5	BLIORS	Bliors	of cumfort
18:6	DS	ds	which
18:7	ODO	odo	openest
18:8	BVSDIR	Bus-dir [X-57]	the glory
18:9	OIAD	o-ĭ-ad	of God
18:10	OVOARS	o-uŏ-ars	to the center
18:11	CAOSGO	ca-ós-go [X-57]	of the erth
18:12	CASARMG	Ca-sarmg ["as, dg": X-57. i.e., soft "g"]	In whome
18:13	LAIAD	la-ĭ-ad [X-57]	the secrets of truth
18:14	ERAN	e-rán [X-57]	:6332:
18:15	BRINTS	brints	have
18:16	CAFAFAM [LEITCH incorrectly gives "casasam" here, believing that the two "s"s have been mistaken for "f"s. He writes, "In Dee's English, f was often written in an elongated fashion that highly resembles an s". I think he means the "s" was elongated which then resembles an "f". He also writes, referring to the 48 Claves Angelicæ, "Here, Dee confirms that the f's shown in this word in TFR should be s's instead". However, the 48 Claves Angelicæ show "f"s, not "s"s: see also X-58, or folio 157v of the original manuscript where this word appears in capital letters]	ca-fă-fam [X-58]	their abiding
18:17	DS	ds	which
18:18	I	i	is
18:19	VMD	vmd	called
18:20	AQLO	a-q́-lo ["qúu": X-58. See Key 1:21]	in thy
18:21	ADOHI [These two words (20/21) appear in the manuscript as listed here; the word "Kingdom" appears elsewhere as "londoh", and in my view this should almost certainly be one word, "aqloadohi", or possibly compound]	a-dó-hi	Kingdome
18:22	MOZ ["qzMOZ" appears in the original Call (X-58), which is certainly an error]	MOZ	IOYE
18:23	OD	od	and
18:24	MAOFFAS	ma-óf-fas	not to be measured
18:25	BOLP	Bolp	Be thow
18:26	COMOBLIORT [Two words, "como bliort", possibly compound]	co-mó-blĭ-ort [X-58]	a wyndow of cumfort
18:27	PAMBT	pambt	unto me

18:28	ZACARE	ZACAR [As this is repeated from the first Key it should have a final "e" on "zacar"]	Move
18:29	CA [Dee mistakenly omits this word (ca) from his 48 Claves Angelicæ, as does LEITCH, JAMES and others]	c-a [XXI-1] ["sa": X-13. "two syllables": IX-14. probably sounded "see-ah"]	therefore

18:35	ZORGE	zorge, ["of one syllable": IX-13]	Be frendely unto me
18:36	LAP	lap	for
18:37	ZIRDO	zi̱rdo ["ï": IX-13]	I am
18:38	NOCO	Noco	the servant
18:39	MAD	MAD,	of the same your God,
18:40	HOATH	ho-ath [XXI-11]	the true worshipper
18:41	IAIDA	Iaḯda [The First Key has "Iaïda". This also appears as "Iaída" in XXI-12. Page XI-97 (Key of the 30 Ayres) gives the pronunciation as "Ya-í-da"]	of the Highest.

VII. CONCORDANCE OF ANGELIC WORDS IN DEE'S 48 CLAVES ANGELICÆ

This concordance includes every variation of individual words found in the 48 Keys. For other words, including all the names found in Dee's four Tables of Enoch (see appendix X "Complete Angelic Lexicon". Subheadings include related words which are not always in strict alphabetical order.

The first column appears as found in the manuscript.

The second column gives Dee's pronunciation guide (i.e., split into syllables with accents, see appendix VI). This generally follows Dee's 48 Claves Angelicæ (Book XXI), but for alternatives see appendix X. Note that some words when joined, including most compound words, can, it would seem, be pronounced differently from their isolated counterparts.

The third column gives the Key where the word is found (where "19" = the Key of the Thirty Ayres), followed by the word number.

The fourth column is the English translation (somewhat modernized), with any relevant notes added in square brackets.

Symbols used:

[word]	Editorial comments, between square brackets.
WORD	Cross-references are indicated by small capitals.
"word"	Quotation from the manuscripts.
{.....}	English text with no obvious Angelic word(s), enclosed between curly brackets.
*	An asterisk indicates a possible error.

	matb	10:64	a thousand
matorb	matorb	10:58	[possibly misplaced, and meaning one hundred. Often translated as echoing, which seems to date back to the Golden Dawn, it does not originate from Dee. Indeed, the English of all Keys from 6 to 18 will be found on pages XI-74–81, where all Angelic words for the various numbers are given in the margin, with leader lines pointing to the relevant number in the English text. In fact all words added at this stage were numbers, and this, in my view, includes matorb. A number of errors were made in this Key (Key 10) including some apparently redundant words, which greatly confused Dee and everyone since. Whatever the truth may be, Dee omitted to include Torb (100) in his final version of the Keys (Book XXI), where a number of other errors can be found; see further in appendix VI]

VIII. LIST OF SPIRITUAL CREATURES

This is a complete list of all Spiritual Creatures, including names of God, that are found in the manuscripts, omitting those found in the Four Tables of Enoch (unless in the conversations), often giving more information than that found in the "Manuscripts Index". All of these names (with the exception of those underlined) are specifically related to Dee's Angelic system and are not encountered elsewhere.

Symbols used:

"translation"	Editorial translations, or quotations from other sources (indicated), are shown in italic text.
"translation"	Translations and comments from the manuscripts are shown in upright text.
>origin	Source or orign of a word, phrase or quotation.
..../....	Alternative spellings are separated by a forward slash.
WORD	Cross-references are indicated by small capitals.
word*	Possible spelling error, indicated by an asterisk.

Ab Angel, second Daughter of the Daughters of Light.

Adonay Divine name: >Hebrew אדני – "my lord".

Adraman Fallen spirit.

Aflafben/Aphlafben Dee's good angel.

Akele Angel, fifth Daughter of Light.

An Angel, second Son of the Sons of Light.

Anachor Angel.

Anael/Annael "prepositus orbis veneris", "ruler over the planet Venus". Archangel; by some considered identical to HANIEL.

Anchor Angel.

Anilos Angel.

Annael Archangel (see also Anael).

Aphlafben See Aflafben.

Asmodeus Demon of Jewish legend found in the book of Tobit.

Ath "I am almost Hath". Angel, third Daughter of the Daughters of Light.

Ave Angel, third Son of the Sons of Light.

Azael Fallen angel also known as Azazel; Dee quotes from the Sibylline Oracles.

Azdobn Angel, sixth Daughter of Light.

Babalel Heptarchical King, governor of Tuesday.

Bagenol Heptarchical Prince under King BALIGON. Probably an alias of HAGONEL(II).

Bagonel See Bagenol.

Baligon Heptarchical King, governor of Friday.

Bamasan Good angel.

Bamnode One of forty-nine good angels in the Tabula Collecta.

Carmara Heptarchical King, also called BALIGON or MARMARA, governor of Friday.

Cherubim/Cherubym Choir of angels, not the baby-like figure with wings found in Italian Renaissance art, but the creatures described by Ezekiel as having four faces: Lion, Ox, Eagle, and Man: >Hebrew כרבים – Kerubim, pl. of כרוב – Kerub.

Confirmantes "Confirming Ones", angels.

Confundantes "Confounding Ones", angels.

Corabiel Angel of Mercury, Kokabiel would perhaps be more correct. Dee refers to the Magical Elements of Peter de Abano, where Corabael (sic) is assigned to the Moon. Here, however, Corabiel is assigned to the planet Mercury: >Hebrew כוכב – Kokab (Mercury), also has the meaning of "star/planet".

Coronzom "for so is the true name of that mighty divell": >Gabriel. Usually given as Choronzon. See in the margin of IX-48, where a facsimile copy of this name is reproduced; the line just above the n (largely missing in the MS.) is treated as an accent by SHIPPEN, but is unclear.

Corsax Good angel.

Cumael Angel.

Daughter of Fortitude "All her attyre is like beaten gold": >Kelley. Unnamed spiritual creature, usually believed to be MADIMI.

Dmal Angel, fourth Son of Light.

Rocle Angel, fifth Son of the Sons of Light.

S Angel, first Daughter of the Daughters of Light.

Salamia See Salamian.

Salamian/Salamia Angel, found in the Magical Elements of Peter de Abano.

Saniel Angel, perhaps Samiel. Dee quotes from the Sibylline Oracles.

Sathan Satan.

Semeliel Angel of the Sun.

Semiel/Semiæl/Semyeil/Semieil Angel. Dee gives a rather dubious etymology as from the Hebrew שם + אל, "(the secretary for) the name of God".

Sendenna/Soudenna Evil spirit.

Seraphim Choir of angels, six-winged fiery creatures, described in Isaiah. 6:2, Revelation 4:8 and in the Ethiopic Book of Enoch: >Hebrew שרפים, likely to mean "serpents".

Soudenna Evil spirit, also called SENDENNA.

Stimcul$^{(I)}$ Angel, seventh Daughter of Light.

Stimcul$^{(II)}$ Angel, seventh Son of Light.

Sudsamna Kelley's good Angel.

Synfulla Unknown spirit.

Zebaoth "hosts/armies". Divine name: >Hebrew צבאות, usually appended to יהוה or אלהים to make "the Lord of Hosts" or "the God of Hosts".

Zedekieil A variation of ZADKIEL.

IX. A SELECTION OF INTERESTING QUOTATIONS

DEE'S EXPERIENCES OF POSSIBLE PSYCHIC ACTIVITY

[IV-14]

Dee I fele: and (by a great thundring noyce, thumming thuming in myne eares) I perceyve the presence of some Spirituall creature abowt me.

[IV-30]

[The following event appears in Colin Wilson's introduction to Robert Turner's "Elizabethan Magic", but has been somewhat distorted, stating that it was Dee who saw the angel Uriel, which then handed him the crystal. This false account can be found on the Internet in at least two places. He also states that Dee "first saw an angel in the crystal globe in May 1581", but this also is not quite true, Dee simply writes "I had sight in Χρυσταλλῳ [Crystal] offered me, and I saw", there is no mention of any angel.]

Carmara .... Loke, if thow see it: But styr not, for the Angel of his powre is present.

[Dee] E.K. Loked toward my west wyndow, and saw there first uppon the matts by my bokes a thing (to his thinking) as big as an egg: most bright, clere, and glorious: and an angel of the heyth of a little chylde holding up the same thing in his hand toward me: and that Angel had a fyrey sword in his hand, &c.

Carmara Go toward it, and take it up.

Dee I went toward the place, which E.K. pointed to: and tyll I cam within two fote of it, I saw nothing: and then I saw like a shaddow, on the grownd or matts hard by my bokes under the west wyndow: The shaddow was rowndysh, and less then the palm of my hand. I put my hand down uppon it, and I felt a thing cold and hard: which (taking up), I perceyved to be the Stone before mentioned.

Carmara Kepe it sincerely. Veritas in veritate: Deus in Deo, Vnus in uno est. Let no mortal hand towche it, but thyne owne.

[VI-21–22]

[This event has been included here because it remains unclear whether Dee actually witnessed the fire being thrown at Kelley. I think if Dee had actually seen this he would probably have been somewhat more excited by it].

[E.K] All is become clere, save the Table which remayned covered with the clowde still. A great thunder began agayn, and the chayre remayned all in fire. Now the boke appeareth evidently, lying uppon the Globe in the chayre, and the letters appered wet styll, as yf they were blud.

[Dee] There appered fire to be thrown oute of the stone, uppon E.K.
The sownd of many voices semed to pronownce this – Let all things prayse him and extoll his name for ever.

E.K. The fire is still in the chayre, but so transparent, that the boke and letters therof may well be seen.

[Dee] E.K. felt his hed as if it were on fire.

A voyce Sic soleo errores hominum purificare.

A voyce Say what you see.

E.K. I see letters, as I saw before.

A voyce Move not from your places; for, this place is holy.

A voyce Read.

E.K. I cannot.

Dee You shold have lerned the characters perfectly and theyr names, that you mowght now have redyly named them to me as you shold see them.

[Dee] Then there flashed fire uppon E.K. agayne.

A voyce Say what thow thinkest.

Dee He sayd so to E.K.

E.K. My hed is all on fire.

EARLHAM COLLEGE LIBRARY

A voyce What thow thinkest, every word that speak.

E.K. I can read all, now, most perfectly, and in the Third row thus I see to be red.

[VII-49]
Dee

He (E.K.) toke up in his hand the bokes, which I had browght from London of the Lord Laskyes, written to him, in his commendation &c. And as he was loking ernestly on them, a Spirituall Creature did pat the boke on the owtside of the parchement cover, diverse tymes; and ones, wold have taken it out of his hand: Diverse times I hard the strokes, my self.

[VIII-1]
Dee

This 22 day we were in great daunger of perishing (on the sands, called the Spitts:) abowt mydnight: We had (by force of wynde, contrary) anchored by them, and the Anchor cam home, no man perceyving it tyll the ship was redy to strike on the sands: Then, uppon great diligence and pollycy used by our mariners in hoysing sayle, and cutting our cable, (to leave our shote anker), and comitting our selves to the hands of God, and most ernestly praying for a prosperous wynde. It pleased the almighty and most mercifull God, suddenly to change the wynde which served us to beare from the sands and to recover Quinborowgh, back agayn:

[XI-83-4] Ave: Sathan laugheth you to skorn, for he sayeth unto the lord, standing before him, "Are these they whome thow deliveredst from the perills of the Seas, and from the hands of the wycked, whome the wyndes wer a Cumfort to."

[XIX-25] Ben: And who helped you to pass the mervaylous great dangers of the Sea? And so toke occasion to speak of the benefit which God had hitherto done for us, very many.

Dee

The frame of the stone gave a cryckling, no hand towching it, or other wise any mortall or worldly thing moving it. I hard it very certaynly, and to E.K. it semed the sownd of a bunsh of keys, as if they had quyckly byn shaken and strongly:

[XI-30]
Dee

Suddenly appeared a mighty long & big arme and hand in the ayre, to catch at the shew stone: and E.K., meaning to save it from him, put his hand on the stone & immediately the stone was out of the frame, we know not how, & lay by on the cusshen &c.

[XI-60]
Ave

As Concerning your Action, The Hevens bear wittness of it. Yea yesterday did the good Angells contend with the wicked: and there was a great conflict betwixt them: and that, abowt the Love of God towards you, and your Action.

Dee

There was a Terrible storm of thunder hayle and rayne, toward the ende of our yesterdays Action which, I sayd, was somwhat more than naturall.

[XII-17]
Dee

Remember on Wensday night the 18 of Iulii, as I walked alone abowt 9 of the clock in the evening, in the chamber before my study, (above) in diverse places of that chamber appered flashes of fyre: & it did not lighten abrode.

[XIV-46]
Dee

The occasion of this comming to the shew stone was that as we sate to gither in the stove, there was a pat or stroke or two (not naturall) given on the bench & wall: & with all I felt on my hed a hevy moving thing: & allso after that E.K. felt on his bak as yf one had written letters distinctly: wheruppon we went to understand the will of god, as being therto half warned & styrred by these tokens.

[XVII-1–2]

[On the 10 of April 1586 while in Prague, a voice tells Dee (through Kelley), "The books and all things which thou didst receive from me, thou shalt place before me". The voice then tells Dee to tear the books apart (twenty-eight books in all) and Kelley is to put them into a black bag and place them into the furnace, and Francesco Pucci is to join him to see that he does as instructed, throwing in pieces of wood and stirring the heap of books, "in order that the fire will consume everything more easily ...". Later, Pucci says, "Nothing is left to be seen except ashes, stones and a few very hot coals ..." When all was finished, the voice says, "Behold, I swear by myself, that not a single letter will perish of that which was committed to the fire. .... And in the same way that these things were given to the fire, so in the same manner wilt thou receive them again."
– Translated from ASH 1790 (Book XVII), to which the reader is referred, or for an English translation see JOSTEN]

[Dee] [29th April 1586] ... Then sayd I, I will go into the garden. & bad E.K. come with me. We went down that way, which this Creature did go: but nothing we saw. We went to the banketting howse in the vyneyard. But that place pleased us not: so, we went along in the way by the clef syde, & satt down on the bank by the great pyle of vyne-stakes lying in the very sowth ende of the vyneyard. And we had not sytt there, half a quarter of an howre, but I espyed ... like a shete of fayre white paper lying, tossed to & fro in the wynde. I rose & went to it: & (to the prayse of God his truth & powre,) there I fownd three of my bokes lying, which wer so diligently burnt the tenth day of Aprill last. The three bokes were, Enoch his boke, The 48 Claves Angelicæ, and the third was the boke of my Gathering of the thirty ayres, & entytled Liber Scientiæ terrestris, Auxilii et Victoriæ. Theruppon E.K. comming to me, I fell on my knees with great thanks yelding to the God almighty, & so did E.K. whose mynde & body wer mervaylously affected at the sight of the sayd bokes, having no shew or signe that ever they had byn in the fyre; neyther by cullor or savor or any thing wanting.

And after we had sat half an howre under the forsayd Almond tree praysing god & wondring at the miracle: Suddenly appered by us, the self same gardener-like person, but with his face somwhat turned away & nothing therof to be judged as of Ave the Custom is. He sayd, Kelly follow me. E.K. went & I satt still, awayting his retorn. This Gardener went before E.K. and his fete semed not to towch the grownd by a fote heith. And as he went before E.K., so the dores did seme to open before him, ... & at length browght him to the furnace mowth where all the bokes & papers had byn burnt the 10th day of this April. And comming thither, there the Spirituall Creature did seme to ... reach into the furnace, ... and as he had reached into the furnace there appeared a great light, as yf there had byn a wyndow in the bak of the furnace, ... and so over his sholder backward he did reach to E.K.: all the rest of the standing bokes, ... Allso to E.K. appered in the furnace all the rest of the papers which wer not as then delivered out.

This being done, he bad E.K. Go, and sayd He shold have the rest afterward. He went before in a little fyrie clowde, ... and he browght me the bokes unto my place under the Almond tree.

[XVIII-23]
Dee

In the year 1586, 18 of June, at Erphurdia, Thuringia.

Whither the most illustrious Lord Rosenberg had sent John Carpio to us with his letters, and mostly in order to understand God's will concerning his future wife and of other matters &c. I, in truth, was already at Kassel in Hesse: and Master Edward Kelley was at Erphurdia (Erfurt):
who, upon the questions and petitions of "Illustrissimi" (Rosenberg), had, by divine commandment, to lay upon the altar a sheet of clean paper, before the priest celebrating Mass:
and this was done on the morning of the above-mentioned year and day, in the Monastery of the Minor Order of St. Francis, between the 6th and 7th hour, as the senior Monk was celebrating Mass, And when Mass was finished, this, which follows, was found on the paper, beautifully written. But the following day, after it had been copied out for the most illustrious Prince, all the lines and letters immediately disappeared, and nothing afterwards remained visible on the paper, &c.

"All the nations of the earth, summoned to judgment, shall stand before the Tribunal. The people are rebellious, I have long been entangled in fierce anger, too much of the world is addicted to pleasure, they will wither. Change thy ways, so that, neither to the left nor to the right, but to mine own fulfillment. Blessed are those, who obey the commandments of my father, and are glorified by perseverance. Speaking ill of others, while preaching my word, who is a liar in his own works: For many this will be a scandal, and a disgrace of my gospel of peace.

EARLHAM COLLEGE LIBRARY

I have appointed thou, William (because thy hands are joined unto mine) to be anointed, and you will become David to slay Goliath: and exalt thyself within me: to be duly placed at the seat of my justice, and then to thoroughly root out and crush the pride of the unjust and the shameful (those who held up my seat as the footstool of blasphemy and of abomination). Thou wilt be blessed in the strength of my hand and my spirit, for I have heard thy prayers. Do not neglect the time of thy visitation: but shout with the keenest vigour and indignation. Take the young woman as thy wife, who is joined to thy household and who is prepared for thy loins and thine old age, and with your esteemed love, cherish and hold her dear. ....". – Translated from the Latin.

[XIX-37]

Dee Not long to, there appered a great flame of fyre in the principall stone, (both standing on the Table before E.K.) which thing, thowgh he tolde me, I made no ende of my prayer to god: And behold suddenly one semed to come in at the Sowth wyndow of the Chappell, right against E.K. (But before that, the stone was heved an handfull high, and set down again well: which thing E.K. thowght did signifye some strange matter toward) Then after, the man that cam in at the wyndow semed to have his nether parts in a Clowd, & with spred abroad armes, to come toward E.K: At which sight he shrinked bak somwhat, and than that creature toke up betwene both his hands the stone & frame of gold, & mownted up away as he cam: E.K. catched at it, but he could not towch it. At which thing being so taken away, and at the sight therof, E.K. was in a great fear & trembling, and had tremorem cordis for a while. But I was very glad & well pleased.

[XIX-51; twenty-eight days later]

Dee Hereuppon, we went away: And I, comming to my Chamber, fownd my wife lying uppon her bed (where she lay yesternight) and then I lifted up the right pillow, uppon which she lay resting her self (being not well at ease). And in manner under her sholders there I fownd my pretious stone, that was taken away by Madimi. Whereat E.K. greatly wondred: dowting the verity of the Shew. But I and my wife reioysed, thanking god.

[XIX-45]

Dee As concerning the covenant which was made, subscribed & delivered in, but the next day required again of Mr E.K. and in his wifes name to put out his name: &c. But when he had it he Cut it into two equall parts: keping that half wherin his subscription & his wives wer: and delivered unto me the other half, but after a few days desyred to have the sight & reding of both to gither, & then he kept the other part from me allso: but afterward Madimi did with her finger draw on the two papers make them whole again, &c.

SOME INTERESTING POINTS OF TEACHING REGARDING THE 48 KEYS

Nal. I am therfore, to instruct and informe you, according to your Doctrine delivered, which is conteyned in 49 Tables. In 49 Voyces or callings: which are the Naturall Keys, to open those, not 49, but 48: (for One is not to be opened) gates, of understanding: Whereby you shall have knowledge to move every gate, and to call out as many, as you pleas, or shalbe thowght Necessary.

[IX-29–30]

Nal. It is the sense in your tung of the holy and mysticall Call before delivered: Which followeth in practise for the moving of the second Table, the Kings and ministers of government: The Uttrance of which, is of force; and moveth them to visible apparition: moved and appered, they are forced (by the Covenant of god, delivered by his Spirit) to render obedience and faithfull societie. Wherein, they will open the mysteries of theyr creation as far as shall be necessary: and give you understanding of many thowsand Secrets, wherein you are yet but children. For every Table hath his key: Every key openeth his gate, and every gate being opened giveth knowledg of him self of entrance, and of the mysteryes of those things wherof he is an inclosure. Within these pallaces you shall finde those that are of powre, as well to speak, as to do. For every palace (1) is above his Cytie (2), and every City above his entrance (3).

E.K. Why ioyn you numbers with these letters, and added none with those of the former tables?

Gab. Brother, what is the cause that all the world is made of numbers? The Numbers we speak of, are of reason & forme &, not of merchants.

Gab. Every letter signifieth the member of the substance wherof it speaketh. Every word signifieth the quiddity of the substance. The letters are separated, & in confusion. and therfor, are by number gathered to gither: which allso gathered signify a number, for, as every greater conteyneth his lesser; so are the secret & unknown formes of things, knit up in theyr parents: where, being known in number, they are easyly distinguished:

Gab. ..... he [Adam] began to lerne of necessity that language which thow E.K. callest Hebrue: & yet not that Hebrue amongst you: in the which he uttred & delivered to his posterity, the nearest knowledge he had of god his Creatures: & from his own self divided his speche into three parts: twelve, three and seven: the number wherof remayneth, but the true formes and pronunciations want: & therfor is not of that force, that it was in his own dignitie, much lesse to be compared with this that we deliver, which Adam veryly spake in Innocency, and was never uttred nor disclosed to man since tyll now. Wherin the powr of god must work, & wisdome in her true kinde, be delivered: which are not to be spoken of in any other tung, neyther to be talked of with mans Imaginations.

[The reader is referred to the Sepher Yetzirah, where the same three parts of speech: twelve, three, and seven, is discussed further.]

Gab. In these keys which we deliver, are the mysteries and secret beings and effects of all things moving and moved with in the world.

[X-62]

Nal. There are 30 Calls, yet to come. Those 30, are the calls of 91 princis and Spirituall Governors, unto whome the Erth is delivered as a portion.

These are generally governed by the 12 Angells, of the 12 Tribes: which are allso governed by the 7 which stand before the presence of God.

[X-75–76]

Map. These Calls towch all the partes of the world. The world may be delt with all, with her partes. Therfor you may do any thing. These Calls are the keys into the gates and cytyes of Wisdom, which ar not hable to be opened, but with visible apparition.

[XI-36]

Ave In each of these howses, the Chief Watchman, is a mighty prince, a mighty Angell of the Lord: which hath under him 5 princis (these names I must use for your instruction). The seales and Authorities of these howses, are confirmed in the begynning of the world. Unto every one of them, be 4 characters (Tokens of the presence of the Sonne of God: by whome all things were made in Creation), Ensignes, uppon the Image whereof, is death: whereon the Redemption of Mankinde is established: and with the which he shall come to Iudge the Earth.

[XI-63]

Ave The 15th day you shall cloath your selves, in vestures made of lynnen, white: and so have the apparition, use, and practise of the Creatures. For, it is not a labor of yeres, nor many dayes.

[XI-70]

Dee As for the forme of our petition or Invitation of the Good Angels. What sort, shold it be of?

Ave A short & breif speche.

Dee We beseche you to give us an example: we wold have a confidence, it shold be of more effect.

Ave I may not do so.

E.K. And why?

Ave Invocation procedeth of the good will of man, and of the heat and fervency of the Spirit: And therfor is prayer of such effect with God.

[VI-7]

Dee And first I think, that those letters of our Adamicall Alphabet have a due peculier unchangeable proportion of theyr formes, and likewise that theyr order is allso Mysticall.

Il These letters represent the Creation of man: and therfore they must be in proportion. They represent the Workmanship wherewithall the sowle of man was made like unto his Creator.

[VI-12]

Il The Table is an Instrument of Conciliation. And so are the other 7 Characters: which you call by the name of Tables, squared out into the forme of Armes: which are propre to every king and Prince according to theyr order.

[VI-23]

Dee The Character or Lamine for me was noted that it shold conteyne some token of my name: and now, in this (accownted the true Character of Dignification) I perceyve no peculier mark, or letters of my name.

Uriel The forme in every corner, considereth thy name:

Dee you mean there to be a certayn shaddow of ∆elta.

Uriel Well.

[The Lamine can be seen on VI-13.]

[VI-31]

Uriel Iustifie not your self: Be Humble and diligent: Continue to the ende. For great is the reward of them that feare the Lorde stedfastly.

[VII-28]

Galvah This Feare is the first that accuseth unto Damnation: But he that is perfectly Wise, or tasteth of wisdome, Knoweth the Ende. And his feare is of the thing that is done. This is the true feare of God. For when we feare synne, we do it, bycause we hate it. When we study to do good, it is a token of our fear. In that it is a token we feare him, whome we love, and for whose honor, we study to do well.

[VI-26]

Uriel The place can not Sanctifie the Action, but the Action the place. But I answer the, after the manner of men.

Dee Hereby, may many other answers be considered.

[VII-20]

Galvah Angels (I say) of them selves, neyther are man nor woman: Therfore they do take formes, not according to any proportion in Imagination, but according to the discrete and appliable will both of him, and of the thing wherein they are Administrators. For, we all, are Spirites ministring the Will of God: and unto whome? Unto every thing within the Cumpas of Nature:

[VIII-65]

Dee At mans commaundement, the Sonne can stand:

Mad. He sayeth true: Beleve him.

[VIII-57]

Nal. So that this Doctrine, is the Mysteries of the Word of God, Sealed from the begynning, now delivered unto man, for that Reformation, which must be in One Unitie established unto the Ende.

[XIV-12]

Uriel[?] What soever I teache you, hath a Mysterie. And I am a Mysterie in my self. Even so all things that you lerne of me you must be content to receyve as mysticall Instructions comprehending perfect truth: and to be known to such as are true.

[IX-52]
Nal. Move not, for the place is holy:
E.K. What meane you by that sentence or phrase?
Nal. It is of two parts, the first, in respect of the Spirit and presence of him that is holy: present & teaching. Second, in respect of your consent, which is obedience. For obedience confirmeth the will of god in man. And the will of God confirmeth mans Salvation. Wherfor it is sayd, move not: and why: bycause the place is holy. Move neyther in mynde, neyther in body. For obedience is the Conclusion, and Confirmation of your separations from the divels. Sacrifice is accepted, but Obedience is better. You are surely answered.
E.K. I like your answer well.
Nal. Our wisdome, shall prove Rhetorik.

[XI-1]
Nal. Our manner is, not as it is of worldlyngs: we determyn not places after the formes of legs, or as leaves are: neyther we can imagine any thing after the fashion of an horne: as those that are Cosmographers do.

[XV-24]
[?] The erthly Creatures have not to do, in this Receptacle. Therfore take hede, thow defyle it not. Yf thow follow the rules of calling them, thow shalt see, that the ayre is theyr habitation. Otherways (irregularly) they appere in such vessels: But such as are prepared for them.

MISCELLANEOUS

[VII-31]
Dee. Note; my companion (E.K.) wold have caused personall apparition of some of the reprobrat spirites, before the Prince Albert Lasky in my study, thereby to shew some experience of his skyll in such doing: But I wold not consent to it. And thereuppon Galuah gave Iudgment and warning of such an error, of my companion his intent &c.

[VII-51]
E.K. My thinketh I am lighter then I was: and I seme to be empty, and to be retorned from a great amasing: for this fortnight: I do not well remember what I have done or sayde.
Mad. Thow art eased of a great burden.

[XI-7]
Dee Tyll 45 degrees both Northerly and sowtherly all is known in the most part of the world. But of any such place there is no knowledg nor likelyhood by any historie of these dayes or of old tyme.
Nal. Therfor, this is kunning and the wisdome of God.
[This is referring to the biblical Paradise or the Garden of Eden.]

[XIII-4]
Mad. Lasky I loke for, but I see not: Behold I wrast my eyes after him, and can not fynde him. Peradventure he hath hyd him self, behynde some mountain, or is crept into a Cave: for he appeareth not.
Dee I beseche you, what is the cause therof? Ys he not gon from Cracovia*?*
Mad. Synn is the greatest mowntayn: and he reioyseth, when he pleaseth him self: and in the fury of his flesh, creepeth into a Cave from us. Lo, I loke for him, and can not see him, yet see all the world over. It is a Signe, that God is not with him.

[XIII-32]
Dee I am now before your Maiestie (sayd I), and have a Message from him to say unto you, and that is this:
"The Angel of the Lord hath appeared to me, and rebuketh you for your Synns. Yf you will here me, and beleve me: you shall Triumphe. Yf you will not here me, The lord, the God that made heven and erth, (Under whome you breath, and have your spirit,) putteth his fote against your brest, and will throw you hedlong down from your seat. Moreover, the lord hath made this Covenant with me (by othe), that he will do and performe. Yf you will forsake your wickednes, and turn unto him, your seat shall be the greatest that ever was: And the Divel shall become your prisoner".
[This is the message given by Madimi, which Dee was commanded to repeat to Emperor Rudolf.]

[XV-15–16]
Dee As concerning my letters and busines into England, I thowght good to ax your cownsayle what I were best to do with the letters to the Quene & other.

And those that are evill there, do stand on his syde: give place to those that are good, so do they allso.*
Dee But as concerning the manner how to practise that boke, I wold gladly here somewhat.
Mich. Sua sunt, sua dicunt.
Dee I understand this to be required at his hands that gave us that boke.
[The book of Enoch mentioned here more than once, is referring to Dee's Book containing the Four Tables of Enoch, and not the book entitled Loagaeth, also sometimes called the Book of Enoch.]

ARLHAM COLLEGE LIBRARY

[XIX-6]

Voice As unto the [E.K.], Barrenes dwelleth with the: bycause thow didst neglect me & take a wife unto thy self contrary unto my commaundement.

[On April 29 1582 the angel Michael ordered Kelley to marry. Dee's marginal note, which he inserts here, referring to the year 1583 would seem to be lost.]

[XIX-27]

Dee Bycause I have fownd so much halting and untruth in E.K. his reports to me made, of the Spirituall Creatures, where I have not byn present at an Action: and bicause his memory may fayle him: and bycause he was subiect to yll tempters: I beleve so much hereof as shall by better tryall be fownd true, or conformable to truth.

[XIX-53–54]

E.K. Here commeth an other woman: All her attyre is like beaten gold. She hath on her forhed a Crosse Christalline, her neck & brest are bare, under her dugges: she hath a girdle of beaten gold slakly buckled unto her, with a pendant of gold down to the grownd.

– I am the dowghter of fortitude, & ravyshed every howr, from my youth: for behold I am understanding, & Science dwelleth in me: & the hevens oppresse me. They covet & desyre me with infinite appetite. Few or none that are erthly have embraced me: for I am shaddowed with the Circle of the Sonne: & covered with the morning Clowdes. My feete are swyfter then the wyndes: & my hands are sweter then the morning dew. My garments are from the begynning: & my dwelling place is in my self. The lyon knoweth not where I walk: neyther do the beasts of the felde understand me. I am deflowred & yet a virgin. I sanctify & am not sanctifyed. Happy is he that embraceth me: for in the night season I am sweete, & in the day, full of pleasure. ... I will open my garments, & stand naked before you, that your love may be more enflamed toward me. As yet, I walk in the clowdes: As yet, I am carryed with the wyndes: And can not descend unto you for the multitude of your abhominations, & the filthy lothsomnes of your dwelling places. ... Therfor, provyde for me. For behold, I now Salute you. And let peace be amongst you: for I am the dowghter of Cumfort. Disclose not my secrets unto wemen: Neyther let them understand how swete I am: for all things belong not unto every one. I come unto you again.

E.K. She is gone along that grene felde allso.

[This angel is sometimes considered to be Madimi, but clearly Kelley never recognised her as such.]

X. COMPLETE ANGELIC LEXICON

This lexicon includes words from Book V (but only those where a meaning has been assigned to them), and also a number of other words scattered throughout the manuscripts including, of course the more important 48 Claves Angelicæ, for which every occurrence has been listed with every variation in spelling, translation, accents, pronunciation, and any relevant notes. All entries appear exactly as Dee wrote them, making this index a complete reference for every Angelic word found in Dee's records. Often, Dee recorded words that were joined together: these will all be found listed here, both joined and separated, including what I have called "compound words" (see the end of appendix VII for a definition and a complete list of these), some of which cannot be reliably separated. Included also are some widely used but erroneous words, indicated by an asterisk and followed in sqaure brackets (e.g., "Peral* [Peoal]). Also included are the ninety-one angelic names (also Governors) and parts of the Earth (see "Notes to Manuscripts" entry for Book XI p. 70), the names from the Four Watchtowers which are found in Book XXIV, the names of the Ayres and the angelic rulers of the Twelve Tribes of Israel. It should be noted that some of these names will be found incorrect when referenced to Dee's Reformed Tables.

In most cases, the first entry is the original word or name followed on separate lines by any other entries in order of occurrence, but not strictly so, with any alternatives or misspellings listed immediately below. Editorial notes attached to an entry also apply to any indented entries below it. Many words have a guide to pronunciation: these are shown immediately following the entry, with the letter or letters referred to being underlined whenever only a portion of the word is concerned (see e.g., "achildao"). Further notes to pronunciation or spelling often follow in brackets.

Where Dee gives "dg" for "g", this is pronounced as a soft "g"(i.e., "j"), some published works show this incorrectly as an alternative spelling. Sometimes Dee gives "i", as for "babagen", where the "gen" is given as "ien" and pronounced "jen". A "gh" (hard "g") should be sounded as in "gold". All alternative spellings given by Dee appear in full and are separated by slashes (see e.g., "AABCO", where Dee writes the letter "O" beneath the first "A" and writes "L" beneath the "B", giving "OALCO"). Finally, sometimes Dee shows syllables with hyphens between them and sometimes with just spaces; to make it consistent I have used hyphens throughout.

This sample entry should clarify the use of indents, etc.:

AAI A-Ă-I X-45	This is the first occurrence of this word, and shows us that the word first appears in capital letters and also gives Dee's pronunciation guide, "A-Ă-I" (also in capital letters). No other information (e.g., a translation, etc.) is given on this particular page (X-45).
aăi amongst you XXI-12	This next entry (indented) is the very same word (i.e., same Key, same word number as the one above) but found in 48 Claves Angelicæ, this gives Dee's original pronunciation guide for "AAI" and also gives a translation (in italic).
AAI (The first A may be an A an O or an E) IX-19	The next entry is also indented, but not indented to the word immediately above, as this word falls elsewhere in the Keys. This entry includes a note by Dee on alternative spellings of this particular word not found anywhere else. No other information appears on this particular page (IX-19).
aäi amongst you XXI-1	This next entry is indented to the word immediately above as this is the very same word as the second entry was to the first (i.e., same Key, same word number). This entry (on XXI-1) gives a pronunciation guide (which differs from the entry above) and a translation.
aái amongst you The original folio with this word is now lost XXI-13, 14	The last entry shows a variation on pronunciation, but with the same translation. This word is not indented to the one above, as this word falls elsewhere in the Keys, but also because the original folio is now lost (as stated within the entry). In this instance there are two page references (13 and 14) which, originally, may, or may not, have fallen on the same (now lost) folio.

Symbols used:

"translation"	Editorial translations are shown in italic text.
"quotation"	Quotations from the manuscripts are shown in upright text.
>origin	Origin of a word or phrase.
..../....	Alternative spellings are separated by a forward slash.
word*	Possible spelling error, usually followed by the correct spelling enclosed within square brackets.
WORD	Cross-references are indicated by small capitals.

MANUSCRIPTS INDEX

This is a very an extensive index, and was originally designed to enable the reader to find any given quotation (hopefully), just look up the key words. It includes every occurrence of all place names, people, and angels found in the manuscripts, it also includes many words and phrases (with a translation if necessary). All main entries are in bold type, with subentries in semibold, most are extracted directly from the manuscripts, therefore the spelling used throughout is Dee's; a few others are enclosed within square brackets, these are editorial entries, not extracted from the manuscripts. Page numbers ending with a small "n" refer, in the main, to marginal notes, but may be found anywhere on the page in smaller type. For words underlined, refer to appendix IV for further explanation.

Symbols used:

"translation"	Editorial translations are shown in italic text.
[word]	Used for clarifying a word or phrase, sometimes used within an entry.
"quotation"	Relevant quotations/translations, in semibold (not always from the same location as the entry).
>origin	Origin of a word or phrase.
..../....	Alternative spellings are separated by a forward slash.
~	The tilde character will be found in many sub-headings usually at the end of a word or phrase and indicates that the main heading (in bold) is to be substituted here, otherwise at the beginning (if at all).
word*	Possible spelling error, followed by the correct spelling enclosed within square brackets.
WORD	Small capitals indicates a cross-reference.

PREFACE.

WHAT is here preſented unto thee (Chriſtian Reader) being a True and Faithful Relation, &c. (as the Title beareth, and will be further cleared by this Preface) though by the carriage of it, in ſome reſpects, and by the Nature of it too, it might be deemed and termed, A Work of Darkneſſe: Yet it is no other then what with great tenderneſſe and circumſpection, was tendered to men of higheſt Dignity in Europe, Kings and Princes, and by all (England excepted) liſtned unto for a while with good reſpect. By ſome gladly embraced and entertained for a long time; the Fame whereof being carryed unto Rome, it made the Pope to beſtir himſelf, not knowing what the event of it might be, and how much it might concern him. And indeed, filled all men, Learned and Unlearned in moſt places with great wonder and aſtoniſhment: all which things will be ſhewed and made good (to the utmoſt of what we have ſaid) in the Contents of this book, by unqueſtionable Records and evidences. And therefore I make no queſtion but there will be men enough found in the world whoſe curioſity will lead them to Read what I think is not to be paraliell'd in that Kind by any book that hath been ſet out in any Age to read: I ſay, though it be to no other end then to ſatisfie their curioſity. But whatſoever other men, according to their ſeveral inclinations, may propoſe to themſelves in the reading of it, yet I may and muſt here profeſſe in the firſt place, in Truth and Sincerity, that the end that I propoſe to my ſelf (ſo far as I have contributed to the Publiſhing of the Work) is not to ſatisfie curioſity, but to do good, and promote Religion. When we were firſt acquainted with the Book, and were offered the reading of it, having but lately been converſant in a Subject of much Affinity; to wit, of Miſtaken Inſpiration and Poſſeſſion, through ignorance of Natural cauſes (which labour of ours, as it was our aime at the firſt in publiſhing of it, to do good, ſo we have had good reaſon ſince to believe, that we did not altogether miſſe of what we aimed at) we could not but gladly accept of it. And as we gladly accepted, ſo we read unto the end with equal eagerneſſe and Alacrity: Which when we had done, truly it was our Opinion, That the Publiſhing of it could not but be very Seaſonable and Uſeful, as againſt Atheiſts at all times, ſo in theſe Times eſpecially, when the Spirit of Error and Illuſion, not in profeſt Anabaptiſts only, even of the worſt kind that former Ages have known and abhorred, doth ſo much prevail, but in many alſo, who though they diſclaim and deteſt openly (and heartily too, I hope, moſt of them) the fruits and effects that ſuch cauſes have produced in others, yet ground themſelves nevertheleſſe upon the ſame principles of Suppoſed Inſpiration and immaginary Revelations; and upon that account deem themſelves, if not the Only, yet much better Chriſtians then others. And I was much Confirmed in this Judgment when I was told (as indeed I was, at the firſt, by them that knew very well) that the Moſt Reverend, Pious and Learned Archbiſhop of Armagh, lately deceaſed, upon reading of the ſaid book, before his death, had declared himſelf to the ſame purpoſe, and wiſhed it Printed. But becauſe it is very poſſible, that every Reader will not at the firſt be ſo well able of himſelf to make that good uſe by good and Rational Inferences and Obſervations of this ſad Story as is aimed at, my chiefeſt aim in this Preface is to help ſuch. And becauſe it is not leſſe probable that this Licentious Age will afford very many, who with the Saduces of old (that is, Jewiſh Epicures) believe no Spirit, or Angel, or Reſurrection; who therefore being prepoſſeſſed with prejudice when they hear of ſo many Spirits as are here mentioned, and ſo many ſtrange Apparitions, in ſeveral Kinds, will not only fling back themſelves, but will be ready to laugh at any other that give any credit to ſuch things. Although I will not take upon me to convert any by Reaſon that are engaged into ſuch an opinion by a wicked life; that is, Unjuſt practiſes, Luxurious lewd courſes, open profaneneſſe, under the name of Wit and Galantry, and the like, becauſe, I think, it is very juſt with God to leave ſuch to the error and blindneſſe of their Judgments; ſo that without a Miracle there can be little hopes of ſuch. Yet I ſhall hope that ſuch as are Rational men, ſober in their Lives and Converſations, ſuch as I have known my ſelf; yea, men of excellent parts in other things, men that are both willing to hear and able to conſider: that ſuch, I ſay, may receive ſome ſatisfaction by what I ſhall ſay and propoſe to their Ingenuous conſideration in this matter. Were we to argue the caſe by Scripture, the buſineſſe would ſoon be at an end; there being no one Controverted point among men, that I know of, that can receive a more Ample, Full, Clear and ſpeedy determination, then this buſineſs of Spirits, and Witches, and Apparitions may, if the Word of God might be Judge. But I will ſuppoſe that I have to do with ſuch, who though they do not altogether deny the Word of God, yet will not eaſily, however, admit of any thing that they think contrary to Reaſon, or at leaſt not to be maintained by Reaſon. I ſhall therefore forbear all Scripture Proofs and Teſtimonies in this particular, and deſire the Chriſtian Reader (who otherwiſe might juſtly take offence) to take notice upon what ground it is that I forbear.

But though I will not uſe any Scripture for proof, yet by way of Application I hope I may be allowed to uſe ſome Scripture words, which may direct us perchance to a good Method in the examination of this buſineſſe. The Apoſtle ſaith in a place, φάσκοντες εἶναι σοφοὶ, ἐμωράνθησαν: (profeſsing themſelves to be wiſe, they became fools) I ſhall not enquire of whom, and upon what occaſion it was ſpoken: I draw no argument from it; only becauſe there is a ſhew of great Wiſdom in this Opinion; and yet, as I conceive, as much of Error and falſhood (that is, Folly, as the word is often uſed) as in any other falſe opinion that is leſſe popular. I will frame my diſcourſe to this iſſue, firſt, to enquire what it is that makes it ſo popular and plauſible, among them eſpecially that pretend to more then ordinary Wiſdom; and then ſecondly, lay it open (as I am able) to the view in its right colours, that the Folly or falſhood of it may be diſcernable even to ordinary judgments.

Firſt then, (as for them that deny Spirits, &c.) we ſay, The world is full of impoſture; to know this, to obſerve it in all Trades, in all Profeſſions, in all ranks and degrees of men, is to know the world, and that is to be wiſe. Though we call them Juglers, yet they deſerve to be thought the plaineſt dealing men of the world that ſhew their tricks openly in the ſtreets for money; for they profeſſe what they are. They are the trueſt Juglers that do their feats (and they for mo-ny too, moſt of them) under the Veil and Reputation of Holineſſe, Sanctity, (or, Saintſhip) Religion, Virtue, Juſtice, Friendſhip; fine words to catch men that are of eaſie Belief, and thinks that every thing that gliſters muſt needs be gold. Hence it is, that men that have had the Reputation of Wiſe men in the world, have commended this unto us as greateſt Wiſdom, NOT EASILY TO BELIEVE: Νῆφε, ϗ μέμνησο ἀπιστεῖν: ἄρθρα ταῦτα τῶν φρενῶν· Epicharmus got more credit for this one ſaying (and hath done more good too, perchance) then many that have been the Authors of vaſt Volumes. Now if thoſe things that are expoſed to ſenſe, the proper Objects of our Eyes and Eares, be lyable to ſo much Imposture and Deceit, that the wiſeſt can ſcarce know what to believe: How much more caution do we need in thoſe things that are ſo much above Senſe, and in ſome reſpects contrary to Senſe (and that is Spirits) that we be not deceived? If we conſider the Nature of man, his Bodily frame, the Affections of his ſoul, the Faculties of his mind, we ſhall have no occaſion at all to wonder if moſt men are apt to believe and to be cheated. But as no cauſe to wonder, ſo as little cauſe to imitate: Felix qui rerum potuit cognoſcere cauſas! τερατολογία, a deſire of, or to ſtrange things that may cauſe amazement, is the proper affection of the vulgar, that is, of moſt men, which they bring into the world with them, (it is the obſervation of the wiſeſt of men that have written concerning the affairs and actions of men) and cannot be rid of but by wiſdom, which is the happineſſe of few: Errandi, non neceſsitas tantum, ſed amor. Seneca ſomewhere ſpeaking of the Nature of Man; There was a time when the world was much governed by Oracles; private men went unto them as unto God, Kings and Princes ſent unto them to be adviſed about greateſt matters: and ſo much faith was aſcribed unto them, generally, that the very word became a Proverb appliable unto thoſe things, whereof no queſtion can be made. Yet thoſe very ancient Heathens, that tell us of theſe Oracles, tell us of their vanity; and though they ſay not, That all were falſe and counterfeit, yet whileſt they acknowledg it of ſome, they give us juſt occaſion to ſuſpect that it might have been found as true of the reſt alſo, had like care been taken to examine the truth of them alſo.

Again, there was a time (and that time not many hundred years yet paſt) when Miracles were the only diſcourſe and delight of men: Ghoſts and Spirits were in every houſe; and ſo prone were men to receive what was delivered unto them in that kind, that Miracle-makers were much put to it, not to make their ſtories probable, (for that was not ſtood upon) but to make them wonderful enough; inſomuch that ſome have been forced to complain publickly of the credulity of the people, who yet themſelves tell us much more, I dare ſay, then was ever true. As of Miracles, ſo of Exorciſmes: How many Divels and Spirits have been driven out of men and women, ſuppoſed to be poſſeſſed, by ſolemn Exorciſmes, to the great wonder of the beholders, which afterwards upon further ſearch and examination, have been convicted to have been nothing but the artifices and ſubtil contrivances of men? Sentences and Judgments have paſſed upon ſuch cheats when they have been diſcovered in moſt places of Europe, which have been publiſhed. But they have done ſtrange things though (ſome that were thought poſſeſſed) and things impoſſible, to ordinary ſenſe, to be done by Nature. It is very true, ſome have: But they that know what ſtrange things may be done to the amazement of all not acquainted with ſuch myſteries, by long Uſe and Cuſtome, they will not eaſily wonder (ſo as to make a ſupernatural thing of it) though they ſee things, which, to their ſight and of moſt, cannot but ſeem very wonderful, and almoſt impoſſible. As for the bodily temper of man and of his Brain, it hath been ſufficiently by ſome late books of that ſubject (Enthuſiaſme) both by reaſons from Nature, and by ſundry examples proved, that a very little diſtemper of the brain, ſcarce diſcernable unto any, but thoſe that are well verſed in the ſtudy of Natural cauſes, is enough to repreſent Spirits, Angels and Divels, Sights and Stories of Heaven and Hell to the Fancy: by which ſober kind of Madneſſe and deliration, ſo little underſtood vulgarly, many have been, and are daily deceived; and from theſe things, through the ignorance of men, ſtrange things ſometimes have enſued, and the peace of Common-weales hath ſuffered not a little.

Ariſtotle, in his Meteors, tells of one that alwayes ſaw (ſo he thought, at leaſt) another man's ſhape before his eyes, and how they happened unto him naturally, he gives a reaſon. Hyppocrates, Περὶ παρθενίων, (a very ſhort Diſcourſe, but full of excellent matter) ſheweth how ſome, both men and women, through Natural cauſes, come to fancy to themſelves that they ſee δαίμονας. Divels and Spirits, and to be tormented in their Souls, even to the making away of themſelves by their own hands. The Author of the book, De Morbo Sacro, (very ancient too, but not right Hyppocrates, as many are of opinion) hath excellent matter too, to the ſame purpoſe; but I have not the book at this time by me. Hyppocrates, (where before) ſheweth how many in that caſe were gulled by the Prieſts of thoſe times, making them believe, That this happened to them through the anger of ſome god. “They that are verſt in the Opticks know, That there is a “way, through the help of glaſſes that ſhall not be ſeen, to make moving ſha-“dows that ſhall appear like Ghoſts, to the great terror of the ignorant behold-“er: and it is ſaid, That pretended Aſtrologers and Fortune-tellers cheat many “by thoſe ſights. It is the opinion of ſome Jewiſh Rabbins, That what Ghoſts or Souls are raiſed by Necromancy, they alwayes appear inverſo corpore, that is, their head dowards and feet upwards. Though nothing is to be wondered at in Rabbins, who (commonly) are as full of ridiculous conceits as ever came into the head of any Bedlam: Yet my opinion is, “That the firſt ground of “this wild conceit was, ſome appearance by the Species of an object, gathered “through a little glaſſe into a dark room. For ſo indeed the objects muſt ap-“pear inverſo corpore if it be done in a high room, and the objects from whence “the Spiecies are gathered be lower then the glaſſe through which they paſſe. And the reaſon of it is very Demonſtrable to the ſight of any reaſonable man. Certainly, by this ſecret (which yet is no great ſecret, being commonly ſeen and practiſed among them that are any thing curious) ſtrange things may be done by a Cunning-man, to their great amazement that know not the cauſe. There would be no end if I ſhould attempt to gather from ſeveral Authors what hath been invented by men, and what may be done by Art to cheat men in matters of this nature. Let any man, that is yet a ſtranger to it, but read the life of Alexander the falſe Prophet, or Prognoſticator, written by Lucian, and he ſhall ſee notable examples of ſucceſſeful Cheats and Impoſtures, ſcarce credible indeed, but that the thing was yet then freſh and famous, and that all circumſtances of Hiſtory confirm the truth of the relation. And let him that reads it judge, what dull and dry fellows the Mountebank-Aſtrologers, Prognoſticators and Fortune-tellers of theſe dayes are, to this Noble, Renowned Alexander. Only let him know that reads, that Lucian was a profeſt Atheiſt, and therefore no wonder if he find Epicurus ſpoken of with great reſpect, whom all Atheiſts, and Atheiſtically inclined are ſo much obliged to honour. This excepted, I think, the Story is very worthy to be known, and much more worthy to be read by all men (conſidering the good uſe that may be made of it) then many books that are daily tranſlated out of other languages.

Hiſto-

But laſtly, If there were any ſuch thing, really as Divels and Spirits that uſe to appear unto men; to whom ſhould they (probably) ſooner appear, then to ſuch as daily call upon them, and devote their Souls and Bodies unto them by dreadful Oaths and Imprecations? And again, then to ſuch, who through damnable curioſity have many times uſed the means (the beſt they could find in books, by Magical Circles, Characters and Invocations) and yet never, neither the one nor the other ſaw any thing?

I have ſaid as much as I mean to ſay (though ſomewhat perchance might be added) to ſhew the plauſibleneſſe of the opinion, in oppoſition to vulgar apprehenſions and capacities, whereby (as I conceive, for I have not wittingly omitted any thing that I thought material) it chiefly intitles it ſelf to wiſdom, and more then ordinary prudence, which all men generally are ambitious of. Yet I would not have it thought that all men that hold this concluſion, That there be no Spirits, &c. go ſo rationally to work, or can give this account or any other more rational and plauſible for what they hold. God knows there be many in the world, men of no learning, and mean capacities, who can ſpeak as peremptorily as the beſt, not becauſe they have conſidered of it, and underſtand the grounds of either opinion, but becauſe they know, or have heard it is the opinion of ſome Learned, and they hope they ſhall be thought learned too if they hold with them. Beſides an ordinary (for ſome have been learned) Epicurean, who makes it his Motto (to himſelf and in his heart) Ἐν τῷ μηδὲν εἰδέναι, ἥδιστος βίος: and ſeeks his eaſe in this world (ἀταραξίαν, their own word, which imports Tranquility both of mind and body; a good word but ill applyed) as his ſummum bonum, or chiefeſt happineſſe: It is a great eaſe to him when any ſtrange things doth happen by Witches, Wizards and the like; and other ſome to ſatisfie their faith, others their reaſon and curioſity, are put to it to enquire of men by conference, and to ſearch into books ancient and late, Sacred and Profane, and all little enough. A great eaſe, I ſay, for him, then, and upon all ſuch occaſions, to poſſeſſe his Soul in ſecure ignorance, and to ſave his credit (yea, and to gain credit with ſome) by barely ſaying, Fabula eſt, I do not believe it. We ſhall hear ſome of them by and by acknowledg, in effect, as much as I have ſaid: I impoſe nothing upon them. I will not take upon me to judge of a book that I never read; I cannot ſay that I ever ſaw it. But becauſe I have heard ſome men magnifie an Engliſh book written of this ſubject to prove that there be no Witches, I will impart unto the Reader that hath not obſerved it, the judgment of one of the Learnedſt men that ever England ſaw (I wiſh he had been more gently dealt with when time was) of that book, whereby it may appear (if his judgment be right, as I am very inclinable to believe lieve, becauſe of his great Learning, and wonted circumſpection in his cenſures) what great undertakers many men are upon very little ground, and how prone others to extol what doth favour their cauſe, though to the prejudice of their better judgments, if they would judge impartially. Dr. Rainolds in thoſe elaborate Prælectiones de libris Apocryphis, where he doth cenſure ſome opinions of Bodinus as prejudicial to the Chriſtian Faith. Reginaldus Scotus, noſtras, (ſaith he) qui contrariam Bodino inſanit inſaniam, ait Papiſtas confiteri, non poſſe Demonas ne audire quidem nomen Jehovæ. Acceperat ille à Bodino, & attribuit Papiſtis in genere, tanquam omnes Papiſtæ in eo conſpirarent. Pergit ipſe, & quoniam animadverterat quaſdam fæminas maleficas, aliquando iſtius modi narrationes ementiri, putavit omnia eſſe ficta; ex imperitia Dialecticæ, & aliarum bonarum artium: Ut qui nullo judicio, nullà methodo, nullâ optimarum artium ſcientiâ, eodem modo aggreſſus ſit hanc rem, quomodo Poeta loquitur, ——— Tenet inſatiabile quoſdam Scribendi cacoëthes:

& eodem prorſus modo ratiocinatur, &c. We have been the more willing to produce this paſſage out of the writings of that Learned man, becauſe we alſo in our anſwers may have occaſion to ſay ſomewhat to the ſame purpoſe; not of that Author or his book, which he judgeth, any thing, but of the ground upon which he builded, which we ſhall find to be the ſame upon which others alſo, that deny Spirits have gone upon. But we will go Methodically to work, and take every thing in order, as we have propoſed in the objections.

Firſt, We ſaid, The world was full of Impoſture. It is granted, of Impoſtors and Impoſtures. But what then ſhall the concluſion be, That therefore there is no truth in the world, or at leaſt not to be attained unto by mortal man? Truly, many books of old have been written to that effect. Sextus Empiricus is yet extant, a very learned book it cannot be denied, and of excellent uſe for the underſtanding of ancient Authors, Phyloſophers eſpecially. I could name ſome Chriſtians alſo, by profeſſion, men of great learning that have gone very far that way. But this will not be granted by ſome I am ſure that are or have been thought great oppugners of the common opinion about Witches and Spirits; ſome Phyſicians I mean, and Naturaliſts by their profeſſion. But may not we argue as plauſibly againſt that which they profeſſe, as they have done or can do againſt Spirits and Apparitions? We would be loath to make ſo long a digreſſion; we have had occaſion elſewhere to ſay ſomewhat to this purpoſe: and they that will be ſo curious may ſee what hath been written by Cornel. Agrippa (who is very large upon this ſubject) about it, not to name any others. It is not yet a full twelve-moneth, that a friend of mine, a Gentleman of quality, brought his Lady to London (ſome 60 miles and upwards from his ordinary dwelling) to have the advice of Phyſicians about his wife (a very Virtuous and Religious Lady) troubled with a weak ſtomack and ill digeſtion, which cauſed grievous ſymptoms. I think he had the advice of no leſſe then a dozen firſt and laſt: I am ſure he named unto me five or ſix of the chiefeſt in Credit and practice that the Town affordeth. Not one of them did agree in their opinions, either concerning the Cauſe, or the means to be uſed for a Cure. So that the Gentleman went away more unſatisfied then he came. What he did I knovv not: I knovv vvhat ſome men vvould have inferred upon this. Yet I, for my part, for the benefit that I have received by it, and the effects that I have ſeen of

it,

it, both upon my ſelf, and others in my life-time, upon ſeveral occaſions (where learned Artiſts, not Empiricks have been employed) though all the world ſhould be of another opinion, I think my ſelf bound to honour, as the profeſſion, ſo all Learned, Ingenious Profeſſors of it: and I make no queſtion but the worſt of Agrippa's objections, by any man of competent judgment and experience, may eaſily be anſwered. I ſay therefore that as in other things of the world, ſo in matters of Spirits and Apparitions, though lyable to much error and impoſture, yet it doth not follow but there may be reality of truth and certainty diſcernable unto them that will take the pains to ſearch things unto the bottom, where truth commonly is to be found, and are naturally endowed with competent judgments to diſcern between ſpecious arguments and ſolidity of truth.

But this proveth nothing. No: but the removing of this common objection may diſpoſe the Reader, I hope, to conſider of what we have to ſay with leſſe prejudice. And that ſhall be our next task, what we have to ſay for Spirits, &c. before we come to particular Objections. Wherein nevertheleſſe I will be no longer then I muſt at this time, becauſe I ſhall have a more proper place in two ſeveral Tractates, the one whereof hath been a long time in looſe notes and papers, not yet digeſted, to wit, my Second Part of Enthuſiaſme: the other, in my head yet wholly, but in better readineſſe to be brought to light, becauſe of later conception; to wit, A Diſcourſe of Credulity and Incredulity, in things Natural, Civil and Divine, or Theological. We ſhall meet there with many caſes not ſo neceſſary here to be ſpoken of, which will help very much to clear this buſineſs.

¶ But here I ſay, firſt of all, It is a Maxim of Ariſtotle's the great Oracle of Nature, which many have taken notice of, and applyed to their ſeveral purpoſes: Ὃ πᾶσι δοκεῖ, τοῦτο εἶναι φαμὲν, That which is generally believed, is moſt likely to be true. Who alſo in another place of the ſame book doth approve the ſaying of Heſiod, Φήμη δ᾽ οὔτις πάμπαν ἀπόλλυται, ἥντινα λαοὶ Πολλοὶ φημίζωσι. Now if any opinion whereof queſtion is made can juſtly pretend to a general aſſent and conſent of all people, places, ages of the world, I think, nay, I know, and it will be proved that this of Witches, Spirits, and Apparitions may. I do not know ſcarce any ancient book extant of Philoſopher or Hiſtorian (the Writings of profeſſed Epicureans excepted, of Ariſtotle we ſhall give an account by and by) but doth afford ſome pregnant relation, teſtimony or paſſage to the confirmation of this truth. I dare ſay, ſhould a man collect the relations and teſtimonies out of ſeveral Authors and books (that are come to our knowledge) within the compaſſe of two thouſand years, of Authors well accounted of, generally, and vvhoſe teſtimonies (Hiſtorians eſpecially) vve receive in other things; a man might make a book of the biggeſt ſize and form that ordinary books (vvhich vve call Folioes) are. It is true, many Authors may vvrite one thing vvhich may prove falſe, as the famous hiſtory of the Phenix, perchance, or ſome ſuch; but upon examination it vvill appear that thoſe many take all from one or tvvo at the moſt, vvho firſt delivered it. They add nothing in confirmation of their ovvn knovvledg or experience. But here it is quite othervviſe; thoſe many Authors that I ſpeak of (Hiſtorians eſpecially of ſeveral ages) they tell us different things that hapned in their own times, in divers places of the world: and of many of them we may ſay they were ſuch as knew little of former books, or ſtories of other Nations but their own. Within theſe 200 years the world, we know, by the benefit of Navigation hath been more open and known then before; yea, a great part of the world diſcovered that was not known before. I have read many books, the beſt I could meet with, in ſeveral Languages, of divers Voyages into all parts of the world: I have converſed with many Travellers, whom I judged ſober and diſcreet. I never read any book of that argument, nor yet met with man, that I have had the opportunity to confer with, but was able of his own knowledg to ſay ſomewhat whereby my belief of theſe things might be confirmed.

Now for the Epicureans (of all Philoſophers the moſt inconſiderable in matters of knowledg, as former ages have deſcribed them) no man need to wonder if they denyed thoſe things which by the ſolemn engagement of their Sect they were bound and reſolved, notwithſtanding any ſight or ſenſe, experience or evidence to the contrary, not to believe, at leaſt not to acknowledg. This doth clearly appear by one that may be believed (though I have met with it in more) in ſuch things. Lucian (himſelf a profeſt Epicurean Atheiſt) who doth commend Democritus, Epicurus and Metrodorus (the moſt famous of that Sect) for their ἀδαμαντίνην γνώμην, as he calls it, their fixed, irrevokeable, unconquerable reſolution, when they ſaw any ſtrange thing that by others vvas admired as miraculous, if they could find the cauſe or give a probable gueſſe, vvell and good, if not, yet not to depart from their firſt reſolution, and ſtill to believe and to maintain that it vvas falſe and impoſſible: It is a notable paſſage, and vvhich excellent uſe may be made of. I vvill therefore ſet dovvn his ovvn vvords for their ſake that underſtand the Language: —— ὥστε πάνυ τὸ μηχάνημα (ſpeaking of ſome of Alexander the falſe Prophet his devices) ἐδεῖτο Δημοκρίτου τινος, ἢ καὶ αὐτοῦ Ἐπικούρου, ἢ Μητροδώρου, ἀδαμαντίνην πρὸς ταῦτα καὶ τὰ τοιαῦτα γνώμην ἔχοντος, ὡς ἀπιστῆσαι, καὶ ὅπερ ἦν εἰκάσαι καὶ εἰ μὴ εὑρεῖν τὸν τρόπον ἐδύνατο, ἐκεῖνο γοῦν προπεπεισμένου, ὅτι λέληθεν αὐτὸν ὁ τρόπος τῆς μαγγανείας: τὸ δ' οὖν πᾶν ψεῦδός ἐστι, καὶ γένεσθαι ἀδύνατον. Who doubts that this is the reſolution of many alſo in theſe dayes, not of them only vvho are Epicureans, vvhoſe manner of living (as vve have ſaid before) doth engage them to this opinion, but of others alſo, vvho think it not for their credit (the vanity of vvhich belief nevertheleſs might eaſily appear, there being nothing ſo mean and ordinary in the vvorld vvherein the Wiſdom of the vviſeſt, in the conſideration of the cauſes, by the confeſſion of beſt Naturaliſts, may not be poſed) to believe any thing that they cannot give a probable reaſon of. Not to be wondred then if we ſee many, notwithſtanding daily experience to the contrary, to ſtick ſo cloſe to thoſe tenets which they have wedded themſelves unto with ſo firm a reſolution from the beginning, never to leave them, be they right or wrong.

As for Ariſtotle, I confeſſe his authority is very great with me; not becauſe I am ſuperſtitiouſly addicted to any of his opinions, which I ſhall ever be ready to forſake when better ſhall be ſhewed unto me; but becauſe (beſides the judgment of all accounted wiſe and learned in former ages) I am convicted in my judgment, that ſo much ſolid reaſon in all Arts and Sciences never iſſued from mortal man (known unto us by his writings) without ſupernatural illumination. Well: Ariſtotle doth not acknowledg Spirits, he mentions them not in any place. Let it be granted: And why ſhould it be a wonder to any man that knows the drift and purpoſe of Ariſtotle's Phyloſophy? He lived when Plato lived; he had been his fellow Scholer under Socrates, and for ſome time his Scholer; but afterwards he became his æmulus, and pleaſed himſelf very much to oppoſe his Doctrine; inſomuch as he is cenſured by ſome Ancients for his ingratitude. The truth is, Plato's writings are full of Prodigies, Apparitions of Souls, pains of Hell and Purgatory, Revelations of the gods, and the like. Wherein he is ſo bold that he is fain to excuſe himſelf ſometimes, and doth not deſire that any man ſhould believe him, according to the letter of his relations, but in groſſe only, that ſomewhat was true to that effect. Indeed he hath many divine paſſages, yea, whole Treatiſes, that can never be ſufficiently admired in their kind; but too full of tales, for a Phyloſopher, it cannot be denyed. Ariſtotle therefore reſolved upon a quite contrary way: He would meddle with nothing but what had ſome apparent ground in Nature. Not that he preciſely denyed all other things, but becauſe he did not think that it was the part of a Phyloſopher to meddle with thoſe things that no probable reaſon could be given of. This doth clearly appear by a Divine paſſage of his, De part. anim. l. 1. c. 5. where he divides Subſtances in ἀγεννήτους καὶ ἀφθάρτους, Eternal and Incorruptible, that is, in effect, Spiritual (for even Spirits that were created might be termed ἀγέννητοι, that is, properly, That have not their beginning by Generation; but we will eaſily grant, that the creation of Angels, good or bad, was not known to Ariſtotle: (we may underſtand Gods and Intelligences) and thoſe, that μετέχουσι γενέσεως καὶ φθορᾶς, that is, are mortals. He goes on, As for Divine Subſtances, which we honour, we can ſay but little of them, though we deſire it; becauſe ſo little of them is expoſed to ſenſe [and Reaſon.] Mortal things that we are familiarly acquainted and daily converſe with, we may know if we take pains. But much more ſhould we rejoice in the knowledg (yea though we know but a very little part) of things Divine for their excellency, then in the knowledg of theſe worldly things though never ſo perfect and general But the comfort that we have of them (which doth make ſome amends) is the certainty, and that they come within the compaſſe of Sciences. What could be ſaid more Divinely by a man that had nothing by revelation? Truly, there appeareth unto me (if I may ſpeak without offence and miſconſtruction) more Divinity in thoſe words, then in ſome books that pretend to nothing elſe. Add to this another place of his in his Metaphyſicks, where he ſaith, That though things ſupernatural be of themſelves clear and certain, yet to us they are not ſo, who ſee them only with Owles eyes. Can we ſay then that Ariſtotle denyed thoſe things that he forbore to write of, becauſe they were (their natures and their qualities) above the knowledg of man? Neither is it abſolutely true that Ariſtotle never wrote of Spirits and Apparitions. Cicero in his firſt book De Divinatione, hath a long ſtory out of him of a ſhape or Spirit that appeared in a dream to one Eudemus (his familiar friend and acquaintance) and foretold him ſtrange things that came to paſſe. Clemens Alexandrinus hath a ſtrange ſtory out of him, of a Magical Ring, one or two, which Exeſtus, King of the Phocenſes did uſe, and foreſaw things future by them. It is to be found and ſeen among the fragments of Ariſtotle's works. And that he did not deny Witches, may appear by that mention he makes of them in more then one place. How much he aſcribed to common report and experience, though no reaſon could be given, doth appear by his Preface to his Treatiſe De Divinatione per inſomnia: where he propoſeth the caſe, how hard it is for a rational man to believe any thing upon report which he can ſee no reaſon for; nay, which ſeemeth contrary to reaſon: as, for a man to foretel by dream what ſhall happen in another Kingdome far off without any apparent cauſe. But on the other ſide, ſaith he, not leſs hard to deny that which all men, or moſt men, do believe, to wit, that there be ſuch predictions. For to ſay (his own words) that ſuch dreams come from God, beſides what elſe might be objected (which might eaſily be underſtood by them that underſtand his Doctrine) it is moſt unreaſonable to believe that God would ſend them to men either vitious in their lives, or idiots and fools, of all men the moſt vile and contemptible, who have been obſerved to have ſuch dreams oftner then better and wiſer men. So leaving the buſineſſe undetermined, he doth proceed to the conſideration of thoſe Prophetick dreams, for which ſome probable reaſon may be given. Yet in the ſecond Chapter he ſaith directly, That though dreams be not θεόπεμπτα, yet they may be perchance * δαιμόνια, for ſuch he acknowledges Nature to be, not θεῖαν, but δαιμονίαν only. I will not enquire further into the meaning of theſe words; it is not to be done in few words. It plainly appears that nothing troubled him ſo much (for he repeats the objection twice or thrice) as that God ſhould be thought to favour either wicked men or fools. I wiſh no worſe Doctrine had ever been Printed or Preached concerning God. But ſtill let it be remembred that he knew of no Divine Word or Revelation. Yet Jul. Scaliger in his Commentaries upon Hypocrates De Inſomniis, doth wonder that Ariſtotle ſhould ſtick ſo much at this, and ſeems himſelf to give a reaſon grounded in Nature. Indeed he ſaith ſomewhat as to the caſe of fools and idiots, but nothing (that I remember) that reacheth to wicked men alſo. Let theſe things be conſidered, and let the Reader judge of how different temper Ariſtotle was from that of ancient or later Epicures. This mention of Ariſtotle and Plato puts me in mind of Socrates their Maſter, his Familiar Spirit; no Shape but a Voice only, by which his life and actions were much directed. The thing is atteſted by ſo many, ſo grave Authors whereof ſome lived at the very time, others not long after, or in times not very remote, that I know not how it can be queſtioned by any man. Neither indeed is it, that I remember, by any Heathens or Chriſtians of ancient times, and there have been books written of it, divers in Greek and Latine, whereof ſome are yet extant. But whether it were a good Spirit or an evil, ſome men have doubted, and it is free for any man to think what he pleaſeth of it. For my part I ever had a Reverend opinion of Socrates,

and

* The Latine Interpreter tranſlates it Dæmonia; & I know not how it can be better expreſſed, though lyable to ambiguity.

and do believe (if there be no impiety in it, as I hope not) that he was, as among Heathens in ſome reſpect, a fore-runner of Chriſt, to diſpoſe them the better when the time ſhould come to imbrace (and it did it effectually) the Goſpel. Many other Phyloſophers, that have been of greateſt fame, were certainly great Magicians, as Orpheus, Pythagoras, Empedocles, and the like, as by thoſe things that have been written of them by ſeveral ancient authors may be collected. But above all I give the pre-eminence to Apollonius Thianeus, a man of later times, and of whom we may ſpeak with more confidence and certainty. This was the man whom ancient Heathens very tenacious of their former worſhip and ſuperſtitions, did pitch upon to oppoſe unto Chriſt. His Life hath been written by divers, four of them were joyned together and oppoſed to the four Goſpels: and Hierocles, a famous Phyloſopher of thoſe times, made a Collation of his Miracles with thoſe of Chriſts, who was anſwered by Euſebius, yet extant. Sure it is, they prevailed ſo much, that he was for a long time worſhipped by many, and in ſundry places as a very God; yea, by ſome Roman Emperors, as we find in Hiſtory. Philoſtratus hath written his Life in very Elegant ſtile (as Photius judged) in 8 books, which are extant. And though they contain many fabulous things, as any man may expect by the undertaking, yet have they ſo much truth and variety of ancient learning, that I think they deſerve to be better known then commonly they are; but cannot be underſtood, I am ſure, as they ſhould be, by any tranſlation either Latine or French that ever I ſaw: For the Paris Edition, though it boaſt of great things (as the manner is) yet how little was performed may eaſily appear unto any that will take the pains to compare it with the former edition of Aldus: Which I ſpeak not to find fault, but becauſe I wiſh that ſome able man would undertake the work; there is not any book, by the Tranſlations yet extant, that more needeth it. What uſe Scaliger made of him, may appear by his frequent quotations in his Notes upon Euſebius, in the Hiſtory of thoſe times. As for Appollonius his Miracles or wonderful Acts (which is our buſineſſe here) though many things have been added, ſome, probably, done by Impoſture, yet I do not ſee how it can be doubted but he did many ſtrange things by the help of Spirits, which things may be judged by due obſervation of circumſtances; as for example, That being convented before Domitian the Emperor in the preſence of many, he preſently vaniſhed and was ſeen a great way off (at Puteoli I think) about the ſame time. That at the very time when Domitian was killed at Rome, he ſpake of it publickly and of the manner of it at Epheſus: and ſo of many others, which ſeem to me (as unto moſt) almoſt unqueſtionable. The greateſt wonder to me is, that ſuch was his port and outward appearance of Sanctity aud Simplicity, that even Chriſtians have thought reverently of him, and believed that he did his wonders by the power of God, or by ſecret Philoſophy and knowledg of Nature not revealed unto other men. So Juſtine Martyr, one of the ancient Fathers of the Church judged of him, as is well known. Moſt later Phyloſophers that lived about Julians time, and before that, as alſo the Emperors themſelves, many of them, were great Magicians and Necromancers, as may eaſily appear, partly by their own writings, and partly by the Hiſtory of thoſe times.

I do very much wonder whether any man, being a Scholer, and not ſtrongly prepoſſeſſed, that doth not believe Spirits, &c. can ſay that he ever read the books of Tryals and Confeſſions of Witches and Wizards, ſuch I mean, as have been written by learned and judicious men. Such as, for example, I account Nichol Remigius, his Demonolatria: ex judiciis capitalibus 900 plus minus hominum, &c. grounded eſpecially upon the Confeſſions and Condemnations of no leſſe then 900 men and women in Lorraine within the compaſſe of few years. That he was a learned man, I think no body will deny that hath read him; and that he was no very credulous and ſuperſtitious man (though a Papiſt) that alſo is moſt certain: and I have wondred at his liberty many times. I know not how it is now in thoſe places; but by what I have read and heard of the doings of Witches and Sor" cerers in Geneva and Savoy in former times (I could ſay ſomewhat of my
" ſelf, how my life was preſerved there very ſtrangely, but my witneſſes are " not, and I will not bring their credit in queſtion for ſuch a buſineſſe.) I am of opinion, That he that ſhould have maintained there that there was no ſuch thing as Witches, or Spirits, &c. would have been thought by moſt either mad and brain-ſick (ſo frequent and viſible were the effects to ſober eyes) or a Witch himſelf. For indeed it is ordinary enough, that thoſe that are ſo really, are very willing (which deceiveth many) to be thought Impoſtors, and there is good reaſon for it: I ſhould ſooner ſuſpect him an Impoſtor that doth profeſſe himſelf (except it be by way of confeſſion, as many have done) and is ambitious to be counted a Witch or Sorcerer. I remember I ſaw a book ſome years ago, intituled, De l'inconſtance des mauvais Anges & Demons, printed at Paris 1612. in quarto, and another of the ſame Author, and ſize, intituled, L'incredulite & meſcreance du ſortilege, Paris 1642. Strange ſtories are told there of a Province of France, about that time (or little before) marvellouſly infeſted with Witches and Sorcerers, inſomuch that people did not know one another (in ſome one place) in the ſtreets, by reaſon of evil Spirits appearing publickly in the ſhape of men; and that the proceedings of juſtice (which doth not happen often) were ſometimes diſturbed by them. I think the Author himſelf was one that was ſent to the place by the King with ſome authority, and to make report. But as I do not altogether truſt my memory, having had but a ſight of the books (it was at the Bell in St. Pauls Church-yard:) So I beſeech the Reader not to reſt upon this account that I give him upon my beſt remembrance, but to peruſe the books himſelf. I am confident he may receive good ſatisfaction, being things that were not done in a corner, but very publickly and well atteſted as I remember. However the reader muſt give me leave (though it be not to this purpoſe, leſt my ſilence be drawn to the prejudice of the truth) to tell him, that I met with one great falſhood there concerning my own father (of Bl. M.) which I have abundantly refuted, and all others of that nature, when I was yet very young. But that (as I conceive) which in all theſe ſtories would moſt puzzle a rational man, is the ſignes which are ſet down by many how witches may be known, as Teats, ſwimming upon the water, dry eyes, and the like : which things indeed have ſome ground of truth, being limited to particular times and places, but are not of general application. Mr. Voſsius had therefore reaſon to find fault with Springerus and Bodinus for making that a certain token of a Witch that ſhe cannot weep. Who alſo in the ſame place doth well except againſt the tryal of γυναικολύσεως, as he calls it (commonly, purgatio per aquam frigidam) condemned by many. But he had done well to have limited his exception, and to have ſhewed how, and when, and how far ſuch obſervations may be uſed. For certainly they are not altogether to be neglected. But the reaſons of ſuch obſervations or marks that are given by ſome, are ſo ridiculous, that they would make a ſober man (that hath not patience enough to ponder all things diligently) to ſuſpect all the reſt. So one tels us, That when the Cock croweth the ſolemn meetings of Witches (which opinion perchance may prove ancient enough; as we ſhall ſhew elſewhere) are diſſolved : and he thinks a reaſon may be becauſe of the crowing of the Cock in the Goſpel, when St. Peter denyed Chriſt. Another tells us, That Witches being well beaten trunco vitis (with a Vine ſtick or club) Maleficia illata ſolvere ſævillina coguntur, have no more force to do hurt, or, that the party bewitched recovereth. And the reaſon (he thinks, and yet he no ordinary man neither) ex myſterio vini & vineæ dilectæ Deo, ex cujus myſterio quotidie Sacramentum Sacroſancti Sanguinis Domini conficitur, &c. But I ſhall have a more proper place for the full examination of theſe things in one of the two Treatiſes before mentioned. It cannot be denyed but this whole buſineſſe of Witches, what through ignorance, what through malice, is very lyable to many miſtakes and divers impoſtures. And it were to be wiſhed that in all ſuch Trials ſome prudent Divines, and learned experienced Phyſicians might be joyned. But hence to conclude with Wierus (who nevertheleſſe doth acknowledg Spirits, and the Illuſions and Apparitions of Divels, and their miſchievous opperations as much as any, and tells as ſtrange things of them) and ſome others, that therefore there are no Witches and Sorcerers, is as if a man ſhould deny the power of herbs becauſe a thouſand things have been written of them of old, and are yet daily falſely and ſuperſtitiouſly. And indeed it ſo fell out once in Rome, as by Plinie is recorded at large, Where when ſome aſcribed ſuch power unto Herbs, as though Sun and Moon had been ſubject unto them, the dead might be raiſed, armies vanquiſhed, and what not! which was not very well reliſhed by many : at laſt came Aſclepiades, who perſwaded men that were very well diſpoſed to be perſwaded, that all Phyſical uſe of Herbs and Simples was a meer cheat, and that men were better want them, there being other means eaſier and leſſe troubleſome to reſtore health and overcome diſeaſes, which he profeſſed to teach : and prevailed ſo far for a while, that they were laid aſide, and a new courſe of Phyſick introduced. Which for a while, as I ſaid, (ſo prone are men commonly to entertain new divices) gave good content generally. It is well obſerved by Ariſtotle (and I think a great part of humane wiſdome dependeth on it) that in all things of the world that are commendable, as there is ſomewhat which is true and real, ſo ſomewhat alſo which is counterfeit and falſe. There is beauty Natural, ſaith he, and there is Artificial beauty by painting and trimming. A true, ſound, healthy complexion, and that which makes a good ſhew, but is not ſound. True, real gold and ſilver, but divers things alſo that may be taken for gold and ſilver at a diſtance, or by them that judge at the outward appearance. So, true, ſound Ratiocination, and that which ſeems ſo to the unlearned, or to corrupt judgments, though it be very falſe. They that conſider well of this, may the ſooner come to the knowledg of truth in all things.

Well: we go on.

There was in Aix (Aquæ Sextiæ anciently, now Aquenſis Civitas) in Provence (a County of France ſo called) in the year of the Lord 1611. a Romiſh Prieſt tryed, convicted, and by Sentence of the Court or Parliament condemned to be burned alive for abominable practiſes, and horrid things by him upon divers (ſome perſons of quality) committed with and by the Divel. He had long deſired it and ſought it; at laſt the divel appeared to him in the habit of a Gentleman. The ſtory is in divers books, French and Latine, and tranſlated (at that time I believe) in divers languages. I would goe forty miles with all my heart to meet with that man that could tell me any thing whereby I might but probably be induced to believe, or at leaſt to ſuſpect, that there might be ſome miſtake in the particulars of his Sentence. For my reaſon, I muſt confeſſe, was never more poſed in any thing that ever I read of that nature. Gaſſendus indeed in Pereskius his life, hath ſomewhat (as I remember) of Pereskius his Opinion, as if he thought ſome of thoſe things he confeſſed might be aſcribed unto imagination; but I ſee no reaſon given: neither are the things of that nature, that can admit any ſuch ſuſpicion. Beſides, Triſtan, of the Lives of the Emperors and their Coynes, will tell you ſomewhat which may make a doubt, whether Gaſſendus ought to be believed in all things that he reporteth concerning that famous man. I am not very much ſatisfied of what Religion (though truly a very learned man) Gaſſendus was. And by the way (which is ſomewhat to the caſe of Witches in general) if I be not miſtaken (for I have it not at this time) there is a relation in that very book of ſomewhat that hapned to Pereskius by Witches when he was a child. That wicked Sorcerer which was burned at Aix, foretold before his death that ſome misfortune would be done at the time and place of his execution, which hapned accordingly, and very ſtrangely too. Somewhat again, I muſt confeſſe, I have ſeen printed (Mimica Diaboli, &c.) to take away the ſcandal of ſome part of his confeſſion, or the Devils ſaying of Maſſe, &c. ſome part of which things might perchance with ſome colour be aſcribed to imagination: but that is not it that troubles me. But enough of him.

What man is he, that pretends to learning, that hath not heard, and doth not honour the memory of Joachimus Camerarius, that great light of Germany? ſo wiſe (and for his wiſdom, and other excellent parts, ſought unto by many Princes) ſo moderate a man (an excellent temper for the attain-

attaining of Truth) and ſo verſed in all kind of learning, that we ſhall ſcarce among all the learned of theſe later Times find another ſo generally accompliſhed. The ſtrangeſt relations that ever I read, or at leaſt as ſtrange as any I have read of Witches, and Sorcerers, and Spirits, I have read in him: ſuch as either upon his own knowledge he doth relate, or ſuch as he believed true upon the teſtimonie of others known unto him. The laſt work that he ever went about for the publick was, De generibus Divinationum, but he did not live (the more the pity) to make an end of it. But ſo much as he had done was ſet out by one of his learned ſons, Lipſiæ, an. Dom. 1576. There p 33. he hath theſe words, De Spirituum verò, quæ ſunt Græcis δαιμόνια admirabili non ſolum efficacitate, ſed manifeſta Specie, quæ φάσματα perhibentur, præſentiâ; incredibiles extant paſſim veterum narrationes, & noſtris temporibus ſuperantia fidem comperta ſunt, extra etiam γοητείας, de quibus poſteà dicetur. So p. 89. & p. 151. again and more fully. But his ſtrangeſt relations are in his Proœmium to Plutarchs two Treatiſes, De Defectu Oraculorum, and De Figura EI Conſecratâ Delphis, ſet out by him with Notes. Here I could come in with a whole cloud of witneſſes, name hundreds of men of all Nations and profeſſions that have lived within this laſt hundred years, and not any among them but ſuch as have had, and have yet generally the reputation of Honeſt, Sober, Learned and Judicious, who all have been of this opinion that we maintain. But becauſe we have to do with them eſpecially who by their Profeſſion pretend to the Knowledge of Nature above other men, I will confine my ſelf for further teſtimony to them that have been of that Profeſſion. I have been ſomewhat curious for one of my Calling, that had no other end but to attain to ſome Knowledge of Nature, without which a man may quickly be lead into manifold deluſions and Impoſtures. I have read ſome, looked into many: I do not remember I have met with any profeſſed Phyſician or Naturaliſt (ſome one or two excepted, which have been or ſhall be named) who made any queſtion of theſe things. Sure I am, I have met with divers ſtrange relations in ſundry of them, of things that themſelves were preſent at, and ſaw with their own eyes, where they could have no end, that any man can probably ſuſpect, but to acknowledge the truth, though with ſome diſparagement to themſelves (according to the judgment of many) in the free confeſſion of their own ignorance and diſability to give reaſons, and to penetrate into cauſes. Well: what then ſhall we ſay to ſuch as Jul. Cæſar, Scaliger, Fernelius, Sennertus, the wonders and Oracles of their times? As Phyſicians ſo Phyloſophers, men of that profound wiſdom and experience (much improved in ſome of them by long life) as their writings ſhew them to have been to this day. What ſhall we make of them? or what do they make of themſelves, that will cenſure ſuch men as either cheaters or ignorant idiots? Henericus Saxonia, a Learned Profeſſor and Practiſer of Phyſick in Padua, in that Book he hath written of that horrible Polonian Diſeaſe, which he calls Plicam, which turneth mens hairs (in ſight) to Snakes and Serpents; in that book he doth aſcribe ſo much to the power of Witches and Sorcerers in cauſing Diſeaſes, not private only but even publick, as Peſtilences and the like, as himſelf confeſſeth he could never have believed, until he was convicted by manifeſt experience; and indeed is wonderful, and may well be thought incredible unto moſt, yet is maintained and aſſerted by Sennertus De Febribus; and in his ſixth book (as I remember) De Morbis à faſcino, incantatione, & veneficiis inductis. I will forbear the names of many men of fame and credit, Phyſicians too, becauſe moſt of them are named (and commonly enough known) by Sennertus upon this occaſion. There is one, whom I think inferiour to none, though perchance not ſo commonly known or read, and that is, Georgius Raguſaius a Venetian, who by his firſt education and profeſſion was an Aſtrologer, caſt many Nativities, and took upon him to Prognoſticate; but afterwards conſcious to himſelf of the vanity of the Art (that is, when the Divel doth not intermeddle, as alwayes muſt be underſtood: for ſome Aſtrologers have been Magicians withall, and have done ſtrange things) gave it over, and hath written againſt it very Learnedly and Solidly. Read him, if you pleaſe, in his Chapters De Magis, De Oraculis; yea, through his whole Book De Divinatione, and you may be ſatisfied what he thought of theſe things: he alſo was a Phyſician. But I muſt not omit the Learned Author that ſet out Muſæum Veronenſe, a great Naturaliſt and a Phyſician too; he handles it at the end of that work ſomewhat roundly and to the quick, I muſt confeſſe, but very Rationally and Solidly, in my judgment, againſt thoſe pretended Peripateticians, that would be thought to defend the opinion of Ariſtotle herein. I could ſay ſomewhat of ancienter Phyſicians too, and give ſome account of thoſe many Spels and Charmes that are in Trallienus, in all his books; an ancient Phyſician, in high eſteeme with ſome eminent Phyſicians of theſe late times, as they themſelves have told me; though not for his Charms, but for his other learning and excellent experience, which they had found good uſe of But this I reſerve for another place & work. And this mention of that eminent Phyſician who commended Trallienus unto me, puts me in mind of what he imparted himſelf, not long before his death, of his own knowledge and experience; and particularly of the account he gave me of the examination of a Conjurer in Salisbury, at which, he ſaid, none were preſent but King James, (of moſt Bleſſed Memory) the Duke of Buckingham, and himſelf: It is likely ſome others may have heard the ſame, and I had rather any body ſhould tell it then I, who was then a patient under him, and durſt not, were I put to it, truſt to my memory for every circumſtance.

Hitherto I have gone by Authorities rather then Arguments, partly becauſe I thought that the ſhorteſt and the cleareſt way for every bodies capacity, and partly, becauſe ſuch Arguments (if any beſides theſe we have here) as have been uſed againſt this opinion, may be found fully anſwered in thoſe I have cited. The truth is, it is a Subject of that nature as doth not admit of many Arguments, ſuch eſpecially as may pretend to ſubtilty of Reaſon, Sight, Senſe, and Experience (upon which moſt Humane Knowledge is grounded) generally approved aud certain, is our beſt Argument. But before I give over, I will uſe one Argument which perchance may prove of ſome force and validity, and that is, A conſideration of the ſtrange ſhifts and evaſions and notorious abſurdities that theſe men are put to, who not being able to deny the ὅτι, or matter of Fact, would ſeem to ſay ſomewhat rather then to acknowledg Spirits, and Divels, and Witchcraft. Pomponatius, who hath not heard of? I once had the book, I know not now what is become of it. But I remember well, I never was more weary of reading then when I read him; nothing that ever I read or heard of Legends and old womans tales did ſeem to me more groundleſſe and incredible. But becauſe thoſe men bear themſelves very much upon the power of imagination (which indeed is very great, and doth produce ſtrange effects) I ſhall commend to the ſober Reader that hath not yet met with him, Tho. Fienus his Learned Tractat, De Viribus Imaginationis, a very Rational and Philoſophical diſcourſe. Of their miſerable ſhifts and evaſions in general, the Author or Obſervator rather of Muſæum Veronenſe, before quoted, will give you a good account. I have at this preſent in my hands the writings of a Phyſician, Augerius Ferrerius by name. What he was for a Phyſician I know not; all (I doubt) of that profeſſion will not allow very well of his Preface to his Caſtigationes Practicæ Medicinæ, whatever they think of the Caſtigationes themſelves. But in general, his Stile, and various reading, and knowledge of good Authors, ſpeak him a Learned man ſufficiently. Thuanus in his Hiſtory gives him a moſt ample Elogium, and makes him to have been Jul. C. Scaliger his intimate acquaintance and much reſpected by him. But I doubt whether Thuanus had ever ſeen this book of his: it doth not appear by that Elogium that he had. Well, this Learned man in his Chapter De Homerica (ſo he calls it) Medicatione, where he treats of cures done by Charms and Spels, by Words and Characters, which others impute commonly to Witchcraft: firſt, for the ὅτι, he doth not deny it: (Nam iis quæ ſenſibus expoſita ſunt contravenire, ſani hominis non eſt.) He thinks them little better then mad men that will deny that which is approved by ſo viſible experience. Yet it ſeems he was one of them that did not believe, or would not believe (though he doth not ſay ſo poſitively) Spirits and Witches, and Supernatural Operations. What then? he plainly maintaineth and argueth it (though he quote no Goſpel for it) that ſuch is the nature of the Soul of man (if he know how to uſe it) that by a ſtrong faith and confidence it may work any miracle without a miracle: Verum confidentia illa, ac firma perſuaſio (that you may have ſome of his words if you have not the book) comparatur indoctis animis per opinionem quam de Caracteribus & ſacris verbis conceperunt. Doctis & rerum intelligentiam habentibus, nihil opus eſt externi, ſed cognitâ vi animi, per eam miracula edere poſſunt. &c. And again a little after, Doctus veró & ſibi conſtans ſolo verbo ſanabit. I do not hence conclude that this Ferrerius, though he ſpeak as though he were, and names no body elſe, that he was the firſt or only that hath been of this opinion. Avicenne the Arab was the firſt, as I take it, that ſet it on foot: ſome others have followed him in it. But ſince theſe men acknowledg the ſtrange effects that others deny, let the ſober Reader judge whether of the two more likely to grant Spirits and Divels, or to make the Soul of man (of every man, naturally) either a God or a Divel. But let men take heed how they attempt to do Miracles by their ſtrong faith and confidence, for that is the ready way to bring the Divel unto them, and that is it which hath made many Witches and Sorcerers. As for that Faith whereby men did work Miracles in the Primitive times, ſpoken of in the Goſpel, commonly called, The Faith of Miracles, that is quite another thing, which I ſhall not need to ſpeak of in this place. Of a ſtrong confidence in God, even in them that are not otherwiſe very godly, whether it may not, according to Gods firſt order and appointment, produce ſometimes ſome ſtrange effects; we have had a conſideration elſewhere, where we treat of Precatorie Enthuſiaſm. But this alſo is quite another thing, as may appear by what we have written of it.

But to conclude this part; upon due conſideration of the premiſes, and what elſe I have in readineſſe upon the ſame Subject (if God give me life and health) I cannot ſatisfie my ſelf how any Learned man, ſober and rational, can entertain ſuch an opinion (ſimply and ſeriouſly) That there be no Divels nor Spirits, &c. But upon this account which I give my ſelf (leaving all men to their own judgments herein) that if there be any ſuch truly and really, it muſt needs be becauſe being at firſt prepoſſeſſed upon ſome plauſible ground, and being afterwards taken up with other thoughts and employments, they are more willing to ſtick to their former opinion without further trouble, then to take the pains to ſeek further. Οὕτως ἀταλαίπωρος τοῖς πολλοῖς ἡ ζήτησις τῆς ἀληθείας, καὶ ἐπὶ τὰ ἕτοιμα μᾶλλον τρέπονται, as Thucydides doth very well obſerve. And when we ſay, A Learned man, there is much ambiguity in that word. For a man may be (not to ſpeak of the ignorance of the common people, in thoſe climates eſpecially, who think all Learning concluded in Preaching; and now in theſe times too, them beſt Preachers that in very deed have leaſt Learning, but preach by Inſtinct and Inſpiration, as they call it) but a man, I ſay, may be a Learned Man, a very Learned man in ſome one kind or profeſſion, even to Excellency and Admiration, who neverthelesſe is and may be found ignorant enough in other kinds: but a general Learned man is a thing of a vaſt extent, and not often ſeen. It is a buſineſſe of an infinite labour, beſides that it requireth Natural parts anſwerable; without which (judgment ſpecially) the more pains ſometimes the more ignorance. I aim not by this at any particular man or men (Deum teſtor) I would much rather ſubmit to the cenſure of others my ſelf, then take upon me to cenſure any; but the obſervation is of very good uſe, I know it, and may give much ſatisfaction in many caſes, and have given an inſtance of it in Tertullian, and ſome others elſewhere.

I have done for this time; I come now to the Objections, wherein I ſhall not need to be very long, becauſe they run much upon one thing, Impoſture, which hath already been ſpoken of and anſwered. But yet ſomewhat more particularly ſhal be anſwered.

Firſt, Of Miracles. It cannot be denyed but the world is full of horrible Impoſtures in that particular: Yet I believe, that ſome ſupernatural things, as cures, &c. do happen in every age, for which no reaſon can be given, which alſo for the ſtrangeneſſe may be called Miracles. But if we limit (with moſt) the word to thoſe things that proceed immediately from God or divine power: I ſhall not be very

very ready to yield that many ſuch Miracles are ſeen in theſe Dayes. But I will not further argue the Caſe in this place. Well, let us take Miracles in the ordinary Senſe: I verily believe that many ſuch things do happen in many places; but that through negligence partly, and partly through incredulity, they are not regarded oftentimes, or ſoon forgotten. And wiſer men, ſometimes, though they know or believe ſuch things, yet are not they very forward to tell them, leſt they bring themſelves into contempt with thoſe ſuppoſed wiſe men, who will ſooner laugh at any thing they do not underſtand, then take the pains to rectifie their ignorance or inform their judgments. I hope I ſhall do no wrong to the Memory of that Venerable, Incomparable Prelate, BISHOP ANDREWES, for Sound Learning and True Piety whileſt he lived, one of the greateſt Lights of this Land; if I ſet down two Stories, which we may call Miracles, both which he did believe to be true, but for one of them, it ſeemes, he did undertake upon his own knowledge: The one, concerning a noted, or at leaſt by many ſuſpected Witch or Sorcereſs, which the Divel, in a ſtrange ſhape, did wait upon (or for rather) at her death. The other, concerning a man, who after his death was reſtored to life to make Confeſſion of a horrible Murder committed upon his own Wife, for which he had never been ſuſpected; both theſe, as he related them to my F. (in familiar converſation) and my F. did enter them for a remebrance into ſome of his Adverſaria. In the ſubſtance I believe there could be no miſtake, but if there be any miſtake in any Circumſtances, as of Names, or otherwiſe, that muſt be imputed to my F. who was a ſtranger, not to the tongue only, but to all buſineſſes (more then what might be known by printed books, and ſuch publick wayes) of England.

The Firſt, thus:

L. vetula Londinenſis, cui morienti Diabolus affuit.

Dixit illa veruecinam habere ſe, pullum gallinaceum, et neſcio quid aliud: ſed omnia incocta, quæ brevi eſſet paratura. Ego, ait ille, Moram non fero; panem habes, ait, et caſeum? quum annuiſſet, atque petiiſſet afferri, comedit ſpectante uxore: deinde advocato Presbytero, et juſsis exire è cubiculo omnibus qui aderant; narrat illi hoc: Ego, ait, verè mortuus fui; ſed juſſa eſt anima redire ad ſuum corpus, ut ſcelus apperiram ore meo, manibus meis admiſſum, de quo nulla unquam cuiquam nota eſt ſuſpicio. Priorem namque uxorem meam ipſe occidi manibus meis, tantâ vafritie, ut omnes res lateret: deinde modum perpetrati ſceleris expoſuit; nec ita multò poſt expiravit, ac verè tum mortuus eſt.

There is no neceſſity that any body ſhould make of either of theſe relations an Article of his Faith; yet I thought them very probable, becauſe believed by ſuch a man, and therefore have given them a place here. So much of Miracles.

Of Exorciſmes we muſt ſay as of Miracles. One notable example of a counterfeit Poſſeſſion, and of great ſtirs likely to have inſued upon it in France, we have out of Thuanus, in our late Treatiſe of Enthuſiaſme. The Hiſtory of the Boy of Bilſon is extant, who by the Wiſdom and Sagacity of the R^t R^t F. in God Thomas, Lord Biſhop of Lichfield and Coventry, was diſcovered to be an Impoſtor on purpoſe ſet up and ſuborned to promote the Romiſh cauſe, An. Dom. 1620. Such examples and ſtories moſt Countries have afforded good ſtore, which are extant in divers Languages. Neither muſt it be concealed (by them that ſeek truth without partiality) that ſome, once called Diſciplinarians, now more known by another name, have attempted to deal in thoſe things, hoping thereby to gain great advantage to their cauſe. It was a famous Story in Q. Elizabeth's Reign, though now perchance out of the knowledg of many, and beyond the remembrance of any living, how one Mr. D. a very zealous man of that Sect, did take upon him by long prayers to caſt out Divels. So maintained and aſſerted with great vehemency by him and ſome others that favoured that cauſe, though upon legal examination they proved otherwiſe, which occaſioned many books on both ſides in thoſe dayes, but two, melioris notæ, as we ſay, written by Dr. H. concerning Exorciſmes; the one againſt Papiſts, the other againſt P. I have them both ſomewhere yet, I hope, but can not come at them at this time, which is the cauſe that I cannot particularize that buſineſſe with circumſtances of times, and names or perſons as I would. But there were many other books written (ſome very big, which I have ſeen) about it, as I ſaid before; ſo that the whole buſineſſe, with very little inquiſition, if any have a mind, may quickly be found out. One Bookſeller in Little Britain did help me to the ſight of ſix or ſeven at once; yet one of the books then written, and as I was told, upon this occaſion much commended unto me by ſome very Learned, to wit, Dr. Jordan, of the Suffocation of the Matrix, I long ſought before I could meet with it. And ſuch was the ignorance of ſome Bookſellers, that I could not perſwade them there was any ſuch book extant: but now at laſt I have got it. All the uſe I ſhall make of it at this time is, that whereas the whole drift of the book tends unto this, to ſhew the error of many in aſcribing natural diſeaſes to ſupernatural cauſes, which might be thought by ſome to favour their opinion that believe not Witches, &c. The Author doth very prudently and piouſly make this profeſſion in the Preface, I do not deny but that God doth in theſe dayes work extraordinarily for the deliverance of his children, and for other ends beſt known to himſelf; and that among other there may be both poſſeſsions by the Divel, and obſeſsions, and Witch-craft, &c. and diſpoſſeſsion alſo through the Prayers and Supplications of his ſervants, which is the only means left unto us for our relief in that caſe, but ſuch examples being very rare now adayes, &c. Yet for all this I do not conclude that Mr. D. was guilty of any Impoſture: he might do it through ignorance being cozened by others. I have heard he was an honeſt man, and dyed piouſly, and diſclaimed to the very laſt that he did any thing in that buſineſſe otherwiſe then Bonâ Fide. I would judge charitably, even of thoſe men that are not guilty of much charity towards others, whoſe judgments and conſciences will not ſuffer them (though men of approved worth and piety otherwiſe) to ſay as they ſay, and to do as they do in all things. Be it granted therefore, that this buſineſſe of Exorciſmes is lyable to much Impoſture: however, no man that hath read the relations of men and women poſſeſt, in ſeveral places, with due obſervation of circumſtances, ſome of which relations, beſides other perſons of credit, have been atteſted; yea, ſome penned and publiſhed by learned Phyſicians and Naturaliſts, who have been employed about the Cure, obſerved their carriage, heard ſome of them ſpeak ſtrange Languages: ſilly women poſſeſt, diſcourſe of higheſt points of Phyloſophy, or the Mathematicks and the like. No man, I ſay, that is not a ſtranger to theſe things (beſides what ſome Travellers, no way intereſſed in the cauſe, can aver upon their own knowledge) will make any queſtion either of the real poſſeſſion of divers, according to relations that have been made, or of the Divels ſpeaking in them and by them when they have been Exorciſed; and ſometimes upon bare conference. And though ſome Proteſtants are of opinion, That it is not lawful or warrantable for any man to take upon him to Exorciſe upon ſuch occaſions, that is, (as I conceive) by way of abſolute power and authority, and by ſuperſtitious wayes and means, as is ordinarily done: Yet where a man hath a Calling, as if he be lawfully Called to the Miniſtry, and ſet over ſuch a Pariſh where any happen to be poſſeſſed (as in-

B. V. m F. deed my ſelf have a Pariſh, that is, right to a Pariſh as good as the Laws of the Land can give me, which hath been grievouſly haunted, though not altogether in the ſame kind, this many years, to the undoing of many there; but I muſt not come near it, nor have the benefit of the Law to recover my right, though never told why) and he find himſelf zealouſly moved, yet without preſumption, I would not deſpair, but his prayers, with other performances of devotion, and the aſſiſtance of ſome others of the ſame calling, might prove available before God: but ſtill preſuppoſed, as moſt expedient and neceſſary, that the opinion and reſolution of ſome Learned and conſcionable Phyſician, one or more, be had in the caſe; and their preſence alſo in all actions, if it may be had, obtained. Some, it may be, will thank me, and I hope it will offend none, if I impart unto them what I have found in my F. his Ephemeris (or, Daily account of his life) tending to this purpoſe.

In Engliſh (for their ſakes that underſtand no Latine, and that it be not required alwayes, for it would be very tedious) this is the effect, At ſuch a time, in ſuch a place, he had the opportunity to meet with a grave (whether Lady or Gentlewoman) Matron, one he had a very good opinion of; her name M. de St. Pons, and having often heard by common report of a certain Proteſtant Miniſter that was ſaid to caſt out Divels, he did accurately inform himſelf by her (ſhe living, it ſeems, very near, if not in the ſame pariſh) of all particulars concerning that buſineſſe; who did averre it to be moſt true, and that ten, or thereabouts, Demoniacks, or poſſeſſed men (all making profeſſion of the Roman Catholick Religion) had been brought to the Church (at ſeveral times, as I take it) and that publickly, and by the generall confeſſion of all then preſent, and by ſome notable ſignes (ſometimes) at the going out of the Devils; they were, upon his Praying after Sermon, all delivered. But that he took it very hainouſly if any ſaid, that he had caſt out Devils; For, not I, ſaid he, but the earneſt Prayers of the Church, have prevailed with Almighty God to work this wonderful thing.

As for Oracles: It is true, Heathens themſelves acknowledg, that ſome were the jugglings of men. Sometimes Princes; ſometimes private men: (as now of Religion, of Preaching, and Praying, and Faſting; of Maſſes and Proceſſions: moſt Princes and States in all places) made good uſe of them to their owne ends; and made them ſpeak what themſelves had prompted. But a man might as probably argue; becauſe ſome have been ſo freely acknowledged to have been by compact and ſubornation, it is the more likely, that thoſe of which never any ſuſpicion was, ſhould be true. We read of many in Herodotus: of one, which was contrived by fraud; but there we read alſo, that when it came to be known (though care had been taken that it might not:) the chief Contriver, a great man, was baniſhed, or prevented worſe, by a voluntary Exile; and the Sacred Virgin or Propheteſſe, depoſed. But not to inſiſt upon particulars, which would be long, it is moſt certain, and it will cleerly appear unto them that are well read in ancient Authors and Hiſtories, That all Heathens, generally the wiſeſt and learnedeſt of them, thoſe eſpecially, that lived when Oracles were moſt frequent, did really believe them to be, which they pretended unto: and that they were ſo indeed, for the moſt part (taking it for granted that their Gods were Divels or Evil Spirits) by many circumſtances of Stories, and by other good proofs, may be made as evident: neither was it ever doubted or denyed (alwayes granted and preſuppoſed, that, as in all worldly things, much impoſture did intervene and intermingle) by ancient Chriſtians acknowledged, I am ſure, by moſt, if not all. But I have ſpoken of them elſewhere already, and therefore will be the ſhorter here.

Our laſt Objection was: If there be Devils and Spirits, Why do they not appear unto them, who do what they can, as by continual curſes, ſo by profane curioſity to invite them? Firſt, We ſay, ἀνεξερεύνητα τὰ κρίματα αὐτοῦ, ϗ ἀνεξιχνίαστοι αἱ ὁδοὶ αὐτοῦ. When we have good ground for the ὅτι, to ſtick at the διότι, becauſe we do not underſtand the reaſon, is as much as to ſay, that we think we ſhould be as wiſe as God. Ariſtotle did not meddle with things that he could give no reaſon of; yet he did not deny them (as we have ſhewed) and it is one thing to require a reaſon of things meerly natural; and another of thoſe that happen by a meer ſecret Providence. But this will give them no great ſatisfaction who perchance believe a God (ſome) as much as they believe a Devil. Secondly, Therefore we ſay, There may be ſome natural reaſon too, upon Ariſtotles grounds. Ariſtotle (as hath been ſhewed elſewhere) compares the effects of Melancholy, from whence he deriveth all kind of Enthuſiaſm, to the known effects of Wine. What is the reaſon, that ſome men with little wine will quickly be drunk, and become other Creatures, being deprived for the time of the uſe of reaſon? Others though they drink never ſo much, will ſooner burſt then reel, or ſpeak idly. as ſome in their exceſs grow merry, others ſad: ſome calm and better natured; others furious: ſome talkative, others ſtupid. The Devil knowes what tempers are beſt for his turn; and by ſome in whom he was deceived, he hath got no credit, and wiſhed he had never meddled with them. Some men come into the world with Cabaliſtical Brains; their heads are full of myſteries; they ſee nothing, they read nothing, but their brain is on work to pick ſomewhat out of it that is not ordinary; and out of the very A B C that children are taught, rather then fail, they will fetch all the Secrets of Gods Wiſdom, tell you how the world was created, how governed, and what will be the end of all things. Reaſon and Senſe that other men go by, they think the acorns that the old world fed upon; fools and children may be content with them but they ſee into things by another Light. They commonly give good reſpect unto the Scriptures (till they come to profeſt Anabaptiſts) becauſe they believe them the Word of God and not of men; but they reſerve unto themſelves the Interpretation, and ſo under the title of Divine Scripture, worſhip what their own phanſie prompts, or the devil puts into their heads. But of all Scriptures the Revelation and the obſcure Propheſies are their delight; for there they rove ſecurely; and there is not any thing ſo prodigious or chimerical, but they can fetch it out of ſome Propheſie, as they will interpret it. Theſe men, if they be upright in their lives and dealings, and fear God truly, it is to be hoped that God will preſerve them from further evil; but they are of a dangerous temper; Charitable men will pity them, and ſober men will avoid them. On the other ſide, ſome there are whoſe brains are of a ſtiff and reſtive mould; it will not eaſily receive new impreſſions. They will hardly believe any thing but what they ſee; and yet rather not believe their eyes, then to believe any thing that is not according to the courſe of nature, and what they have been uſed unto. The devil may tempt ſuch by ſenſual baits, and catch them; but he will not eaſily attempt to delude them by magical Shews and Apparitions. And what ſober man, that believeth as a God, ſo a divel, doth doubt, but they that make it their daily practice to damn themſelves, by ſuch horrid oaths and curſes, are as really poſſeſt, yea far more in the poſſeſsion of the devil, then many that foam at the mouth, and ſpeak ſtrange languages?

But 3^{dly} Some have tried and uſed the means, but could never ſee any thing but what if others that never deſired it really, but in ſome wanton curioſity, unadviſedly, that they might be the better able to confute the ſimplicity of ſome others as they thought, rather then that their faith wanted any ſuch confirmation, have tryed ſome things, or have been preſent at ſome experiments and have ſeen (with no ſmall aſtoniſhment) more then they expected or deſired? Some perſons of credit and quality, I am ſure, have made it their confeſsion unto me, that it hath ſo hapned unto them; who have been ſo affected with it, that they would not for a world be ſo ſurprized again.

But 4^{ly} and laſtly, The Confeſsions of ſome Magicians are extant in print, who tell very particularly what means they uſed, what books they read, &c. and they ſaw and found (if we believe them; and what ſhould tempt them to lye, no melancholy men, I know not) till they were weary, and Gods grace wrought upon their hearts to bring them to repentance. There be ſuch confeſſions extant, but the Reader ſhal pardon me, if I give him no further account. It would much better becom them therefore, that have made ſuch eſſays without ſucceſſe, to repent, and to be thankful unto God, then to make that an argument, that theres no divel, and perchance no God. There is a terrible ſaying (if well underſtood) in the Sctipture; Ὁ ῥυπῶν ῥυπάτω, He that is filthy let him be filthy ſtill Let them take heed (I adviſe them as a friend) if they perſiſt in their hardneſs of heart and infidelity, leſt God in juſt judgment, though they ſeek ſtill, and provoke as much as they can, will not ſuffer that they ſhall ſee any thing, leſt they ſhould fear and be converted.

I come

I Come now to Dr. Dee, and to This Book of his, which hath been the occaſion of all the Diſcourſe hitherto. As for his Perſon or Parentage, Education and the like, I have but little to ſay more then what he ſaith himſelf in his firſt Letter to the Emperor (Rodolphe) of Germany, that being yet very young he was ſought unto (ambiverunt me) by two Emperors, Charls the 5^th^ and Ferdinando his Brother and Succeſſor in the Empire. Mr. Cambden indeed in the year 1572 makes honourable mention of him, and calls him, Nobilis Mathematicus. He dedicated his Monas Hieroglyphica to Maximilian Succeſſor to Ferdinando, firſt printed at Antwerp, An. Dom. 1564. and afterwards at Francford, 1591. and what other places I know not. In the year 1595. he did write (and was printed 1599 I am ſure, but whether before that or no, I cannot certainly tell) A diſcourſe Apologetical, &c. directed to the then Archbiſhop of Canterbury, wherein he hath a Catalogue of books written by himſelf, printed and unprinted, to the number of 48. in all, and doth alſo mention the books of his Library about 4000 volums in all, whereof 700 ancient Manuſcripts, Latin, Greek, and Hebrew. There alſo doth he produce a Teſtimony of the Univerſity of Cambridg, dated 1548. But this whole Diſcourſe of his being but ſhort, for the better ſatisfaction of the Reader, I thought good to have it here reprinted the next after this Preface: His Mathematical Preface before Euclid, is that I think which of all his writings publiſhed hath been moſt taken notice of in England, and added much to the worth and commendation of that Edition of Euclid. He was a married man and had divers children, as will appear by this Relation; a great Traveller, and lived to a great age. But as I ſaid before, I do not pretend to give an account of his life in general, unto others, which my ſelf am yet a ſtranger to. What concerneth this Relation I am to give an account, and I hope there ſhall be nothing wanting to that. Four things I propoſe to my ſelf to that end, Firſt, Somewhat to confirm the truth and ſincerity of this whole Relation.

Secondly, To anſwer ſome Objections that may be made againſt ſome parts of it.

Thirdly, To give ſome light to ſome places, and to ſatisfie the Reader concerning the perfection and imperfection of the book, as alſo, concerning the Original Copy.

Fourthly, and laſtly, To ſhew the many good uſes that may be made of all by a ſober Chriſtian.

I. It ſeems that Dr. Dee began to have the reputation of a Conjurer betimes. He doth very grievouſly complain of it in that Preface to Euclid but now ſpoken of, about the end of it, and yet there doth alſo term himſelf, An old forworn Mathematician. For my part whether he could ever truly be ſo called, I yet make ſome queſtion: But I am very confident, that himſelf did not know or think himſelf ſo, but a zealous worſhipper of God, and a very free and ſincere Chriſtian. How this is to be reconciled with the truth of this Relation, ſhall be afterwards conſidered of. For the truth and ſincerity of the Relation, I hope no body will ſo groſly miſtake us as though we intended thereby to juſtifie what is here printed againſt any ſuſpition of forgery; as if any man taking the advantage of Dr. Dees name and fame of a Conjurer, could be ſuſpected to have deviſed and invented theſe things in his own brain to abuſe the world. I ſhould be ſorry my name ſhould appear in any kind to any book lyable to ſuch a ſuſpition; and the very name and credit of that ſo much and ſo deſervedly prized Library from whence this is pretended to be taken, is ſufficient (with civil underſtanding men) to prevent the groſſeneſſe of ſuch a miſtake. Beſides the Original Copy it ſelf, all written with Dr. Dees own hand, there kept and preſerved. But by Truth and Sincerity, intending not only Dr. Dee's fidelity in relating what himſelf believed, but alſo the reality of thoſe things that he ſpeaks of, according to his relation: his only (but great and dreadful) error being, that he miſtook falſe lying Spirits for Angels of Light, the Divel of Hell (as we commonly term him) for the God of Heaven. For the Truth then, and Sincerity or Reality of the Relation in this ſenſe, I ſhall firſt appeal to the Book it ſelf. I know it is the faſhion of many (I will not ſay that (I never did it my ſelf) that are buyers of books, they will turn five or ſix leaves, if they happen upon ſomewhat that pleaſeth their fancy, the book is a good book, and when they have bought it, it concerneth them to think ſo, becauſe they have paid for it: but on the other ſide, if they light upon ſomewhat that doth not pleaſe (which may happen in the beſt) they are as ready to condemn and caſt away. It is very poſſible that ſome ſuch buyer lighting upon this, and in it, upon ſome places here and there, where ſome odd uncouth things may offer themſelves; things ridiculous, incredible to ordinary ſenſe and conſtruction, he may be ready to judge of the whole accordingly. But for all this, I will in the firſt place appeal to the book it ſelf; but with this reſpect to the Reader, that he will have patience to read in order one fourth part of the book at leaſt before he judge; and if by that time he be not convicted, he ſhall have my good will to give it over. Not but that all the reſt, even to the end, doth help very well to confirm the truth and reality of the whole Story: but becauſe I think there is ſo much in any fourth part, if diligently read, and with due conſideration, that I deſpair of his aſſent, that is not convicted by it. For my part, when the book was firſt communicated unto me by that Right worthy Gentleman who is very ſtudious to purchaſe and procure ſuch Records and Monuments as may advantage the truth of God (all truth is of God) and the honour of this Land, following therein the example of his noble Progenitor, by his very name, Sir Robert Cotton, known to all the Learned as far as Europe extendeth. I read it curſorily becauſe I was quickly convinced in my ſelf that it could be no counterfeit immaginarie buſineſſe, and was very deſirous to ſee the end, ſo far as the book did go. Afterwards, when I underſtood that the ſaid worthy Gentleman (eſpecially, as I ſuppoſe, relying upon my Lord of Armagh's judgment and teſtimonie, which we have before ſpoken of) was willing it ſhould be publiſhed, and that he had committed the whole buſineſs unto me; I read it over very exactly, and took notes of the moſt remarkable paſſages (as they appeared unto me) truly I was ſo much confirmed in this firſt opinion by my ſecond reading, that I ſhall not be afraid to profeſs that I never gave more credit to any Humane Hiſtory of former times. All things ſeemed unto me ſo ſimply, and yet ſo accurately, and with ſo much confirmation of all manner of circumſtances written and delivered, that I cannot yet ſatisfie my ſelf, but all judicious Readers will be of my opinion. But nevertheleſs, to help them that truſt not much to their own judgments, let us ſee what can be ſaid.

Sr Thomas Cotton Knight Baronet.

Firſt, I would have them, that would be further ſatisfied, to read Dr. Dee in that forecited Preface, where he doth plead his own cauſe, to acquit himſelf of that grievous crime and imputation of a Conjurer. But that was written, I muſt confeſs, long before his Communication with Spirits: yet it is ſomewhat to know what opinion he had then of them that deal with Divels and evil Spirits. But after he was made acquainted, and in great dealings with them, and had in readineſs divers of theſe his books, or others of the ſame Argument, containing their ſeveral conferences and communications, to ſhew, and the manner of their appearing exactly ſet down; obſerve, I pray, with what confidence he did addreſs himſelf to the greateſt and wiſeſt in Europe. To Queen Elizabeth often, and to her Council, as by many places of this Relation doth appear; but more particularly by his Letter to Sir Francis Walſingham, Secretary, &c. That he did the like to King James and his Councel, may eaſily be gathered by the Records (in this Relation) of 1607. but much defective. But then to the Emperor Rodolphe, to Stephen King of Poland, and divers other Princes and their Deputies; the wiſeſt and learnedſt, their ſeveral Courts did afford for the time: the particulars of all which addreſſes and tranſactions are very exactly ſet down in the book. Nay, ſuch was his confidence, that had it not been for the Nuncius Apoſtolicus his appearing againſt him at the Emperors Court by order from the Pope, he was, as by ſome places may be collected, reſolved for Rome alſo, not doubting but he ſhould approve himſelf and his doings to the Pope himſelf and his Cardinals. In all theſe his addreſſes and applications being ſtill very ready to impart all things unto them that would entertain them with that reſpect he thought they deſerved; yea, readily, which is very obſervable, even to receive them into this Myſtical Society, whom he thought worthy, and in ſome capacity to promote the deſign; as de facto he did divers in ſeveral places: Albertus Alaſco, Prince Palatine of Polonia, Puccius a learned man, and Prince Roſemberg in Germany, who were long of the Society, beſides ſome admitted to ſome Actions for a while, as Stephen King of Poland, and ſome others. We will eaſily grant (as elſewhere hath been treated and handled at large) that a diſtempered brain may ſee, yea, and hear ſtrange things, and entertain them with all poſſible confidence, as real things, and yet all but fancy, without any real ſound or Apparition. But theſe ſights and Apparitions that Dr. Dee gives here an account, are quite of another nature; yea, though poſſibly the Divel might repreſent divers of theſe things to the fancy inwardly which appeared outwardly: Yet of another nature, I ſay, and not without the intervention and operation of Spirits, as will eaſily appear to any man by the particulars. Beſides the long Speeches, Diſcourſes, Interlocutions upon all occaſions and occurrences in the preſence of more then one, alwayes; and externally audible to different perſons, for the moſt part or very frequently. That theſe things could not be the operation of a diſtempered Fancy, will be a ſufficient evidence to any rational man.

Again, let his uſual preparations and Prayers againſt an Apparition or Action (as he called them) his extraordinary prayers upon ſome extraordinary occaſions, as upon Edward Kelley his temporary repentance, and another for him when he was about to forſake him (in Latine a long one) Stephen King of Poland being then preſent. And again, when his Son Arthur was to be initiated to theſe Myſtical Operations and Apparitions, in the place of Edward Kelley, and the like. And again, his Humility, Piety, Patience, (O what pity that ſuch a man ſhould fall into ſuch a deluſion! but we ſhall conſider of the cauſes in its right place afterwards) upon all occaſions, temptations, diſtreſſes, moſt eminent throughout the whole Book. Let theſe things be well conſidered, and above the reſt, his large and punctual relation of that ſad abominable ſtory of their Promiſcuous, carnal Copulation, under the pretence of obedience to God.—— Let theſe things, I ſay, be well conſidered, and I think no man will make any queſtion but the poor man did deal with all poſſible ſimplicity and ſincerity, to the utmoſt of his underſtanding at that time. And truly, this one thing (as we ſaid before) excepted, his miſtaking of evil Spirits for good, it doth not appear by any thing but that he had his underſtanding, and the perfect uſe of his Reaſon to the very laſt, as well as he had had any time of his life.

Again, let it be conſidered, that he carryed with him where ever he went A STONE, which he called his Angelicall Stone, as brought unto him by an Angel, but by a Spirit ſure enough, which he ſhewed unto many; to the Emperor among others, or the Emperors Deputy, Dr. Curts, as I remember: But more of this Stone afterwards. We may therefore conclude ſurely enough, That Dr. Dee in all this Relation did deal with all ſimplicity and ſincerity. I ſhall only add, That whereas I uſed the word Reality before, concerning thoſe things that appeared, according to this Relation: I would not be miſtaken, as though I intended that whatſoever the Divel did ſeem to do or repreſent; it was Really and Subſtantially as it ſeemed and appeared, that would be a great and groſs miſtake. The very word Apparition doth rather import the contrary. All I underſtand by Reality, is, that what things appeared, they did ſo appear by the power and operation of Spirits, actually preſent and working, and were not the effects of a depraved fancy and imagination by meer natural cauſes. By which, ſtrange things, I confeſs, may be preſented and apprehended too, ſometimes by the parties with all confidence, as we ſaid before, though all be but fancy and imagination. But all circumſtances well conſidered, make this Caſe here to be of another nature; and it may be it was the policy of theſe Spirits to joyn two of purpoſe in this buſineſs, to make the truth and reality of it the more unquequeſtionable; hoping (if God had given way) they ſhould have paſſed, in time for good Spirits abroad generally, and then we ſhould have ſeen what they would have made of it. From theſe beginnings, I am ſure, greateſt confuſions have proceeded and prevailed in the world, as we ſhall ſhew elſewhere. And ſince that in all this buſineſs, as we ſaid but now, Dr. Dee did not deal alone, but had a conſtant Partner or Aſsiſtant, whom ſometimes himſelf calleth his Seer, or Skryer, one by name Edward Kelly: it will be requiſite before we proceed further, that we give ſome account of him alſo. According to Dr. Dee's own relation here, An.Dom. 1587. April 7. Trebonæ: in the particulars of his Son Arthur's Conſecration (after his manner, which he calls, His offering and preſenting of him to the ſervice of God:) Uriel (one of his chiefeſt Spirits) was the author of their Conjunction: but when and how it hapned (being but obiter mentioned there) we do not find any where; and more then what I find here I have nothing to ſay: For certain it is by this whole ſtory, from the beginning to the end of it, that Kelley was a great Conjurer, one that daily converſed by ſuch art as is uſed by ordinary Magicians, with evil Spirits, and knew them to be ſo. Yet I would ſuppoſe that he was one of the beſt ſort of Magicians, that dealt with Spirits by a kind of Command (as is well known ſome do) and not by any Compact or agreement: this may probably be gathered from ſundry places. But that he was a Conjurer, appearereth firſt by that, where he proffered to raiſe ſome evil Spirit before the Poliſh Prince Palatine, Albert Lasky (of whom more by and by) for a proof of his Art. But Dr. Dee would not ſuffer him to do it in his houſe. Wicked ſpirits are caſt out of him to the number of 15. *p.*32. But I make no great matter of that in point of proof, becauſe all there upon his bare report only. But ſee *p.*63. &c. where it is laid to his charge, and he anſwereth for himſelf and his Spirits. See alſo where at laſt he yielded to bury not to burn his Magical books. But read his own confeſsion (where you ſhall find him ſpeak like one that knew very well what did belong to the Art) and the record made by Dr. Dee concerning a ſhrewd conteſt that hapned between Dr. Dee and him, (it was about ſome Magical things) wherein Edward Kelly carried himſelf ſo fiercely, that Dr. Dee being afraid of his life, was forced to call for help. Peruſe well this place and I preſume you will require no further light as to this particular concerning Kelly.

As for the ſeveral Epiſtles (in Latin moſt) that will be found here, as alſo Narratives of ſeveral meetings and conferences, they carry ſo much light with them, being ſet out with ſo many remarkable circumſtances of time, place, perſons, &c. that no man of judgment that hath any knowledge of the world, will or can make any ſcruple of the ſincerity and fidelity of either reports or Deeds and monuments (ſuch I account the Letters to be) herein contained. A man might with little labour (that had all kind of books at command) have found ſomewhat concerning moſt (outlandiſh) perſons in them mentioned. I could not intend it, and I think it would have been a needleſs labour. If any make any queſtion let them make ſearch, I dare warrant it unto them they ſhall find all things to agree punctually. But becauſe Albert Lasky (next to Edward Kelley) is the man moſt

interreſſed in this ſtory, I will give you ſome account of him out of Mr. Cambden his Annals.

Anno Dom. 1583. E Polonia, Ruſsiæ vicinâ hac æſtate venit in Angliam ut Reginam inviſeret, Albertus Alaſco, Palatinus Siradienſis vir eruditus, corporis lineamentis barbâ promiſiſsimâ, veſtitu decoro, & pervenuſto; qui perbenignè ab ipſa nobilibuſque magnoque honore & lautitiis, et ab Accademia Oxonienſi eruditis oblectationibus, atque variis ſpectaculis exceptus, poſt 4. menſes ære alieno oppreſſus, clam receſsit.

But of all Letters here exhibited, I am moſt taken, I muſt confeſs, with the Biſhops Letter that was Nuncius Apoſtolicus: he ſeemes to me to ſpeak to the caſe very pertinently (take Puccius his account along in his long letter to Dr. Dee, of his conference with the ſaid Biſhop concerning the ſame buſineſs) and to have carryed himſelf towards Dr. Dee very moderately and friendly.

II. Now to Objections:

The firſt ſhall be this: Although 'tis very probable that Dr. Dee himſelf dealt ſimply and ſincerely; yet ſince he himſelf ſaw nothing (for ſo himſelf acknowledgeth in ſome places) but by Kelley's eyes, and heard nothing but with his ears. Is it not poſsible that Kelley being a cunning man, and well practiſed in theſe things might impoſe upon the credulity of Dr. Dee (a good innocent man) and the rather, becauſe by this office under the Doctor he got 50 l. by the year, as appeareth. Truly this is plauſible as it is propoſed; and like enough that it might go a great way with them that are ſoon taken, and therefore ſeldom ſee any thing in the truth or true nature of it, but in the outward appearance of it only. But read and obſerve it diligently and you will find it far otherwiſe: It is true indeed, that ordinarily, Dr. Dee ſaw not himſelf; his buſineſs was to write what was ſeen (but in his preſence though) and heard by Kelley. Yet that himſelf heard often immediately appeareth by many places; I ſhall not need any quotations for that himſelf feeleth as well as Kelley. In the relation of the Holy Stone, how taken away by one that came in at a window in the ſhape of a man, and how reſtored; both ſaw certainly. In the ſtory of the Holy Books, how burned and how reſtored again (part of them at leaſt) which Dr Dee made a great Miracle of, as appeareth by ſome of thoſe places; there alſo both ſaw certainly. And Albert Lasky, the Polonian Palatine ſaw as well as Kelley. Beſides, it doth clearly appear throughout all the book that Kelley (though ſometimes with much adoe perſwaded for a while to think better of them) had generally no other opinion of theſe Apparitions but that they were meer illuſions of the Divel and evil Spirits, ſuch as himſelf could command by his art when he liſted, and was acquainted with, inſomuch that we find him for this very cauſe forſaking, or deſirous to forſake Dr. Dee, who was much troubled about it; and is forced in a place to Pawn his Soul unto him (to uſe his own words) that it was not ſo, and that they were good Spirits ſent from God in great favour unto them. But for all this Kelley would not be ſatisfied, but would have his Declaration or Proteſtation of his ſuſpition to the contrary entred into the book; which you ſhall find, and it will be worth your reading. I could further al-alledge, that if a man conſiders the things delivered here upon ſeveral occaſions, being of a different nature, ſome Moral, ſome Phyſical, ſome Metaphyſical, and Theological of higheſt points (though ſometimes wild enough, and not warrantable; yet for the moſt part very remote from vulgar capacities) he will not eaſily believe that Kelley, who ſcarce underſtood Latine) not to ſpeak of ſome things delivered in Greek in ſome places) and betook himſelf to the ſtudy of Logick long after he had entred himſelf into this courſe, could utter ſuch things: no, nor any man living perchance, that had not made it his ſtudy all his life-time. But that which muſt needs end this quarrel (if any man will be pertinacious) and put all things out of doubt, is, that not Kelley only ſerved in this place of Seer or Skryer, but others alſo, as his ſon Arthur, and in his latter dayes, when Kelley was either gone or ſick, one Bartholomew, as will be found in all the Actions and Apparitions of the year 1607. which (as I ſuſpect) was the laſt year of the Doctors life, or beyond which I think he did not live long.

Secondly, It may be objected, or ſtuck at leaſt, How Dr. Dee, ſo good, ſo innocent, yea, ſo pious a man, and ſo ſincere a Chriſtian as by theſe papers (his deluſion and the effects of it ſtill excepted) he doth ſeem to have been, God would permit ſuch a one to be ſo deluded and abuſed, ſo rackt in his ſoul, ſo hurried in his body for ſo long a time, notwithſtanding his frequent, earneſt, zealous prayers and addreſſes unto God, by evil Spirits (even to his dying day, for ought we know) as he is here by his own relation ſet out unto us? Truly, if a man ſhall conſider the whole carriage of this buſineſſe, from the beginning to the end, according to this true and faithful (for I think I may ſo ſpeak with confidence) account of it here preſented unto us, this poor man, how from time to time ſhamefully, groſly delayed, deluded, quarrelled without cauſe, ſtill toled on with ſome ſhews and appearances, and yet ſtill fruſtrated and put off: his many pangs and agonies about it, his ſad condition after ſo many years toil, travel, drudgery and earneſt expectation, at the very laſt (as appeareth by the Actions and apparitions of the year 1607.) I cannot tell whether I ſhould make him an object of more horror or compaſſion; but of both certainly in a great meaſure to any man that hath any ſenſe of Humanity, and in the examples of others of humane frailty: and again, any regard of parts and worth, ſuch as were in this man in a high degree. True it is, that he had joyes withal and comforts, imaginary, deluſory, it is true; yet ſuch as he enjoyed and kept up his heart, and made him outwardly chearful often times, I make no queſtion; ſuch as the Saints (as they call themſelves) and Schiſmaticks of theſe and former times have ever been very prone to boaſt of, perſwading themſelves that they are the effects of Gods bleſſed Spirit. But even in theſe his joys and comforts, the fruits and fancies of his deluded ſoul (as in many others of a diſtempered brain) is not he an object of great compaſpaſſion to any, both ſober and charitable? If this then were his caſe indeed, what ſhall we ſay? if nothing elſe, I know not but it ought to ſatisfie a rational, ſober, humble man: If we ſay, That it is not in man to give an account of all Gods judgments, neither is there any ground for us to murmure becauſe we do not underſtand them, or that they often ſeem contrary to the judgment of humane reaſon, becauſe it is againſt all Reaſon as well as Religion, to believe that a creature ſo much inferior to God, by nature as man is, ſhould ſee every thing as he ſeeth, and think as he thinks; and conſequently judge and determine in and of all things as God judgeth and determineth. The Apoſtle therefore not without cauſe, would have all private judgments (for of publick for the maintenance of peace and order among men, it is another caſe) deferr'd to that time, when the hearts of all men ſhall be laid open, all hidden things and ſecret counſels revealed. But we have enough to ſay in this caſe without it. For if Pride and Curioſity were enough to undoe our firſt Parent, and in him all mankind, when otherwiſe innocent, and in poſſeſſion of Paradiſe. Should we wonder if it had the ſame event in Dr. Dee, * though otherwiſe, as he doth appear to us, innocent, and well qualified? That this was his caſe and error, I will appeal to his own confeſſion (though he makes it his boaſt) in more then one of his Letters or addreſſes, where he profeſſeth, That for divers years he had been an earneſt ſuter unto God in prayer for Wiſdom; that is, as he interprets himſelf, That he might underſtand the ſecrets of Nature that had not been revealed unto men hitherto; to the end, as he profeſſeth, and his own deceitful heart it may be ſuggeſted unto him, That he might glorifie God; but certainly, that himſelf might become a glorious man in the world, and be admired, yea, adored every where almoſt, as he might be ſure it would be, had he compaſſed his deſire. And what do we think ſhould put him upon ſuch a deſire, with hopes to obtain it, but an opinion he had of himſelf as an extraordinary man, both for parts, and for favour with God? But however, had he been to the utmoſt of what he could think of himſelf, beſides his Spiritual pride of thinking ſo of himſelf (as great a ſin as any in the eyes of God) his praying for ſuch a thing with ſo much importunity, was a great tempting of God, and deſerving greateſt judgments. Had he indeed been a ſuter unto God for ſuch Wiſdom as the Prophet Jeremie deſcribeth (11. v. 24, 25.) Let not the Wiſe man glorie in his wiſdom, &c. but let him that glorieth, &c. And for ſuch knowledg as our Saviour commandeth, Joh. 17. 3. And this is life eternal, that they may know thee, &c. And his bleſſed Apoſtle (1 Cor. 11. 2.) For I determined not to know any thing, &c. he had had good warrant for his prayers, and it is very likely that God would have granted him his requeſt, ſo far as might have concerned his own ſalvation and eternal happineſs. Beſides, it is lawful (nay fit) for a man to pray for Gods bleſſing upon his labours, for competency of wit and capacity that he may do well in his vocation and glorifie God. But for a man to aſpire to ſuch eminency above other men, and by means that are not ordinary (as that conceited Phyloſophers Stone, and the like) and to intereſt God by earneſt ſolicitations in his ambitions extravagant deſires; that God, who hath ſaid of himſelf, That he reſiſteth the proud, but giveth grace unto the humble, muſt needs be ſo great and ſo high a provocation (if well conſidered) as that I begin to doubt whether it be charity to pity him that ſuffered ſo juſtly and deſervedly. I do not know but it is as lawfull for any man obſcurely born to pray for a Kingdom, for a Common Souldier that he may have ſtrength to encounter thouſands, or for an ordinarie Maid, that ſhe may become the faireſt of women. In all

all theſe it is poſſible to glorifie God, we grant, were it fit for us to preſcribe unto God, neglecting thoſe that he hath appointed, by what means he ſhould be glorified; and could we ſecure our ſelves that in pretending to Gods glory we do not ſeek our own. I wiſh that our great undertakers, and reformers (ſuch is their wiſdom they think) of Arts and Sciences would ſeriouſly think of this; they eſpecially who take upon themſelves to make all men wiſe and of one mind, and to reconcile all doubts and difficulties in Religion, and otherwiſe; in a word, to make Truth to be imbraced by all men. Should theſe men tell us that if they had had the creating of the world, and the ordering of all things (and there be, I think, in the world that have ſaid little leſs) from the beginning, they would have made an other gueſs of things then God had done: We would have conſiderd of it perchance what might be the ground in any mortal man of ſuch wonderful confidence. But ſuch being the condition of the world, as it is, and ſuch of men, naturally, or to ſpeak as a Chriſtian, ſince the fall of Adam, and the conſequences of it, the curſe of God, &c. to make all men wiſe, of one mind, good, religious, without an infinite omnipotent power, ſuch as of nothing was able to create a world: can any man (ſober and wiſe) hear it, hear it with patience, that thinks it impoſſible, yea ſtrange, that Caſtles ſhould be built in the air, or the heavens battered with great guns? And yet ſuch books are read, yea and much ſet by, by ſome men. My judgment is, That they are to be pittyed (if diſtemper be the cauſe, as I believe it is in ſome) that boaſt of ſuch things; but if wiſe and politick, to get credit and money (as ſome I believe) it is a great argument of their confidence, that there be many in the world that are not very wiſe. But to return to Dr. Dee: It might be further added and proved by examples, that ſome men of tranſcendent holineſs and mortification (in the ſight of men) ſo ſequeſtred from the world (ſome of them) and the vanities of it, that for many years they had converſed with God alone in a manner; yet through pride and conceit of their own parts and favour with God, fell into deluſions and temptations, if not altogether the ſame, yet not leſs ſtrange and dreadful. Such examples Eccleſiaſtical Story will afford, and other books of that nature, but I have them not at this time, and I conceive I have ſaid enough to this particular.

But of his Praying too, ſomewhat would be obſerved. His Spirits tell him ſomewhere, that he had the Gift of Praying. Truly I believe he had, as it is ordinarily called: that is, that he could expreſs himſelf very fluently and earneſtly in Prayer, and that he did it often to his own great contentment. Let no man wonder at this; I have ſhewed elſewhere that ſome that have been very wicked, yea, ſome that dyed for blaſphemy, and with blaſphemy in their mouth to the laſt gaſp, have had it in a great meaſure, and done much miſchief by it. It is no diſparagement to Prayer, no more then it is to the beſt things of the world (and what better and more heavenly then prayer well uſed?) if they be abuſed. And it is commonly obſerved, that the corruption of beſt things is moſt dangerous. What bred thoſe pernicious hereticks that ſo long troubled the world, and could not be ſuppreſſed but by abſolute deſtruction, but long affected prayers (therefore called Euchites or Meſſaliani, that is to ſay, the Prayers) and Enthuſiaſms? And as to that point of inward joy and complacency, which ſome Schiſmaticks and wicked men find in themſelves at their prayers, which ignorant deluded people think to be an argument of the Spirit: It is certain, and is a myſtery of nature that hath (may I ſpeak it without bragging) been brought to light (of late years at leaſt) by my ſelf and fully diſcovered, ‘That not only the inward heat of “ mental conception (where there is any vigor) but alſo the muſick of outward words, is able to occaſion it. Indeed it is a point that doth deſerve to be well conſidered of in theſe times eſpecially. For when young boyes and illiterate men (and the number is likely to increaſe now that Catechizing is ſo much neglected) are turned looſe to exerciſe themſelves in this gift (as they call it) and when by long practice they have attained to ſome readineſs and volubility, which doth occaſion ſome inward lightſomeneſs and excitations, or perchance ſomewhat that may have ſome reſemblance to ſpiritual ſorrow and compunction, they preſently think themſelves inſpired, and ſo they become Saints before they know what it is to be Christians. And if they can Pray by inſpiration, why not Preach alſo? So comes in Anabaptiſm by degrees, which will be the ruine of all Religion and civil Government where ever it prevails. And I believe that this fond fooliſh conceit of Inſpiration, as it hath been the occaſiou of much other miſchief, ſo of that horrid ſacriledge, ſhall I call it, or profanation (I hope I may do either without offence, for it is not done by any publick Authority that I know of) the caſting and baniſhing of THE LORDS PRAYER out of many private houſes and Churches; then which, I think, Chriſt never received a greater affront from any that called themſelves Chriſtians. I am not ſo uncharitable as to believe that it is done in direct oppoſition to Chriſt by any real Chriſtians, but in a furious zeale by many, I believe, againſt ſet prayers. But this is not a place to diſpute it: Certainly, as the Lords Prayer is a Prayer of moſt incredible comfort to them that uſe it devoutly and upon good grounds (a good foundation of Religion and ſound Faith, I mean) ſo I believe that ſet Prayers in general are of more concernment to the ſetling of Peace in the Commonwealth then many men are aware of. But let this paſs for my opinion; there be worſe I am ſure that paſs currently.

Again, A man may wonder (I cannot tell whether an objection may be made of it) that Dr. Dee, though he were at the firſt deluded (to which his own pride and preſumption did expoſe him) as many have been; yet afterwards in proceſs of time when he found himſelf ſo deluded and ſhuffled with; when Edward Kelley did uſe ſuch pregnant arguments to him (as he did more then once) to perſwade him that they were evil Spirits that appeared unto them; nay, when he had found by certain experience, that his Spirits had told him many lies, foretold many things concerning Princes and Kingdoms, very particularly limited with circumſtances of time, which when the time was expired did not at all come to paſs; yet for all this he durſt pawn his Soul for them that they were good Spirits, and continued in his confidence (ſo farre as our Relation goes) to the laſt. I anſwer, Such is the power of this kind of Spiritual deluſion, it doth ſo poſſeſs them whom it hath once taken hold of, that they ſeldom, any of them, recover themſelves. In the dayes of Martin Luther (a great and zealous reformer of Religion, but one that would have deteſted them as the worſt of Infidels that had uſed the Lords Prayer, as ſome have done in our dayes, as appears by what he ſaith of it in more then one place) there lived one Michael Stifelius, who applying to himſelf ſome place of the Apocalypſe, took upon him to Prophecy. He had foretold that in the year of the Lord 1533. before the 29 of September the end of the world, and Chriſts coming to Judgment would be. He did ſhew ſo much confidence, that ſome write, Luther himſelf was ſomewhat ſtartled at the firſt. But that day paſt, he came a ſecond time to Luther with new Calculations, and had digeſted the whole buſineſs into 22. Articles, the effect of which was to demonſtrate that the end of the world would be in October following. But now Luther thought he had had tryal enough, and gave ſo little credit to him, that he (though he loved the man) ſilenced him for a time; which our Apocalyptical Prophet took very ill at his hands, and wondred much at his incredulity. Well, that moneth and ſome after that over, our Prophet (who had made no little ſtir in the Country by his Prophecying) was caſt into priſon for his obſtinacy. After a while Luther viſited him, thinking by that time to find him of another mind. But ſo far was he from acknowledging his error, that he down right railed at Luther for giving him good counſel. And ſome write that to his dying day (having lived to the age of 80. years) he never recanted. And was not this the caſe of learned Poſtellus, who fallen into ſome grievous wild fancies in his latter dayes, though ſound enough ſtill in other things, could never be reclaimed though means were uſed from time to time the beſt and gentleſt (in reſpect to his worth and perſon) that could be thought of? But what talk we of particular men? Conſider the Anabaptiſts in general. Above an hundred years ago they troubled Germany very much: it coſt many thouſands their lives. They roved up and down. No ſooner deſtroyed in one place but they ſprung (whileſt that ſeaſon laſted) in another. Their pretences every where were the ſame; Revelations and the Spirit: the wickedneſs of Princes and Magiſtrates, and Chriſt Jeſus to be ſet up in his Throne. Well, at laſt they were deſtroyed in moſt places. Stories of them have been written in all Languages, read every where, and their lamentable end. Can all this hinder but that upon every opportunity of a confuſed and confounded Government, they ſtart up again in the ſame ſhape and form as before; the ſame pretences, the ſame Scriptures, for all the world, miſerably detorted and abuſed, to raiſe tumults and ſeditions in all places. Such is the wretchedneſs of man that is once out of the right way of Reaſon and Sobriety. But withall we muſt ſay in this particular caſe of Dr. Dee's, though his obſtinacy was great and marvellous, yet it muſt be acknowledged, that great was the diligence and ſubtility of his Spirits to keep their hold: and ſome things ſometimes happened (as his danger and preſervation about Graveſend, when he firſt, here related, went out of the Realm) very ſtrangely, and ſuch was the unhappineſs of his miſapplyed zeal, that he made a Providence of whatſoever hapned unto him as he deſired.

So much for Dr. Dee himſelf. But of his Spirits a greater queſtion perchance may be moved: If evil, wicked, lying Spirits (as we have reaſon to believe, and no man I think will queſtion) how came they to be ſuch perſwaders to Piety and godlineſs, yea, ſuch preachers of Chriſt, his Incarnation, his Paſſion, and other Myſteries of the Chriſtian Faith, not only by them here acknowledged, but in ſome places very Scholaſtically ſet out and declared? It ſeemeth ſomewhat contrary to reaſon and as contrary to the words of our Saviour, Every Kingdom divided againſt it ſelf, &c. But firſt, to the matter of fact: The Divels we know even in the Goſpel did acknowledg, nay, in ſome manner proclaim Chriſt to be the Son of God: which is the main Article he did conteſt with Chriſt by Scripture Authority; and by S. Pauls teſtimony, can transform himſelf, when he liſt into an Angel of light. And in ſome relations well atteſted, of Poſſeſſions and publick Exorciſms that have been uſed; we find the Divel often ſpeaking by the mouth of women, rather like a Monk out of the Pulpit, perſwading to temperance, rebuking vices, expounding of myſteries, and the like, then as one that were an enemy to truth and godlineſs. Inſomuch that ſome have been ready to make a great myſtery and triumph of it, thereby to convict Hereticks and Atheiſts, in time, more effectually, then they have been by any other means that have been uſed hitherto: and aſcribing the whole buſineſs not to the Divel himſelf, but the great power and Providence of God, as forcing him againſt his will to be an inſtrument of his Truth. For my part, I ſee cauſe enough to believe that ſuch things, there contained at large, might come from the Divel; that is, might truly and really be ſpoken by perſons poſſeſſed and inſpired by the Divel. But that they are imployed by God to that end, I ſhall not eaſily grant. I rather ſuſpect that whatſoever comes from them in that kind, though it be good in it ſelf, yet they may have a miſchievous end in it; and that I believe will ſoon appear if they can once gaine ſo much credit among men as to be believed to be ſent by God to bear teſtimony to the truth. A man may ſee ſomewhat already by thoſe very Relations, and that account that is given us there. And therefore I do not wonder if even among the more ſober Papiſts this project (as the relater and publiſher complaineth) hath found oppoſition. The Divel is very cunning; a notable Polititian. S. Paul knew him ſo, and therefore he uſes many words to ſet out his frauds. He can lay the foundation of a plot, if need be, a hundred years before the effects ſhall appear. But then he hath his end. It is not good truſting of him, or dealing with him upon any pretence. Can any man ſpeak better then he doth by the mouth of Anabaptiſts and Schiſmaticks? And this he will do for many years together if need be, that they that at firſt ſtood off may be won by time. But let them be once abſolute maſters, and then he will appear in his own ſhape. There is one thing which I wonder much more at in thoſe Relations I have mentioned, and that is, that the Divel himſelf ſhould turn ſuch a fierce accuſer of them that have ſerved him ſo long, Witches and Magicians. I know he doth here ſo too in ſome kind, in more then one place. He doth much inveigh againſt Divels and all that have to do with them, Magicians, &c. But that is in general only, or in Kelley's particular caſe, upon whom he had another hold, which he made more reckoning of, to wit, as he appeared to them as an Angel of light. Any thing to maintain his intereſt there, and their good opinion of him; for he had great hopes from that plot. But that he ſhould purſue ſo ridgedly particular men and women whom he had uſed ſo long, to death, and do the part of an informer againſt them, may ſeem more like unto a Kingdom divided againſt it ſelf, but it is not our caſe here; neither am I very well ſatisfied, that whatſoever the Divel ſaith or layes to the charge of them by whoſe mouth he ſpeaketh, ought to be received for good teſtimony. Here it may be Wierius had ſome reaſon; for I doubt ſome have been too credulous. But this by the way ſhall ſuffice.

That the Divel ſhould lie often, or be miſtaken himſelf, in his Prophecies, as by many particulars of this Relation will appear, I will not look upon that, as if any objection could be made of it. But it may be wondred, perchance, Dr. Dee being often in ſo great want of monies, that he did not know which way to turn, what ſhift to make; at which time he did alwayes with much humility addreſs himſelf to his Spirits, making his wants known unto them; and the Divel on the other ſide, both by his own boaſting, and by the teſtimonie of thoſe who could not lie, having the goods of this world (though ſtill under God) much at his diſpoſing, and alwayes, as he ſeemed, very deſirous to give Dr. Dee all poſſible ſatisfaction: that in this caſe, once or twice perchance excepted, when the Dr. was well furniſhed (for which the Spirits had his thanks) at all other times he was ſtill, to his very great grief and perplexity, left to himſelf to ſhift as he could, and ſome pretence, why not otherwiſe ſupplyed, cunningly deviſed by them that were ſo able, and to whom he was ſo dear. But I muſt remember my ſelf: I ſaid ſo able; but in ſome places his Spirits tell him plainly, It was not in their power, becauſe no part of their Commiſſion, or becauſe it did not belong unto them (ſuch as dealt with him) to meddle with the Treaſures of the earth: and ſometimes that they were things beneath their cognizance or intermedling. Of the different nature of Spirits, we ſhall ſay ſomewhat by and by, that may have ſome relation to this alſo, perchance. But granting that the Divel generally hath power enough both to find mony and to gratifie with it where he ſeeth cauſe. Yet in this caſe of Witches and Magicians, direct or indirect, it is certain and obſerved by many as an argument of Gods great Providence over men, that generally he hath not: It is in very deed a great Argument of a ſuperiour over-ruling power and Providence. For if men of all profeſſions will hazard (their Souls) ſo far as we ſee daily to get money and eſtates by indirect unconſcionable wayes, though they are not alwayes ſure, and that it be long oftentimes before it comes, and oftentimes prove their ruine, even in this world, through many caſualties; as alterations of times, and the like: what would it be if it were in the power of the D. to help every one that came unto him, yielding but to ſuch and ſuch conditions, according as they could agree?

Hitherto I have conſidered what I thought might be objected by others. I have one objection more, which to me was more conſiderable (as an objection, I mean, not ſo readily anſwered) then all the reſt: Devils, we think

generally, both by their nature as Spirits, and by the advantage of long experience (a very great advantage indeed in point of knowledg) cannot but have perfect knowledg of all natural things, and all ſecrets of Nature, which do not require an infinite underſtanding; which by that meaſure of knowledge that even men have attained unto in a little time, is not likely to be ſo neceſſary in moſt things. But leſt any man ſhould quarrel at the word Perfect, becauſe all perfection belongs unto God properly, it ſhall ſuffice to ſay, That the knowledge Divels have of things Natural and Humane is incomparably greater then man is capable of. If ſo, how comes it to paſs that in many places of this Relation we find him acting his part rather as a Sophiſter (that I ſay not a Juggler) then a perfect Philoſopher; as a Quack, or an Empirick ſometimes, then a True, genuine Naturaliſt. And for language (not to ſpeak of his Divinity, which he might diſguiſe of purpoſe to his own ends) rather as one that had learned Latin by reading of barbarous books, of the middle age, for the moſt part, then of one that had been of Auguſtus his time, and long before that. But that which is ſtrangeſt of all is, that as in one place the Spirits were diſcovered by Ed. Kelley to ſteal out of Agrippa or Trithemius (ſo he thought at leaſt) ſo in divers other places, by the phraſe, and by the doctrine and opinions a man may trace noted Chymical and Cabaliſtical Authors of later times; yea, (if I be not much miſtaken) and Paracelſus himſelf, that prodigious creature, for whom and againſt whom ſo much hath been written ſince he lived; theſe things may ſeem ſtrange, but I think they may be anſwered. For firſt, we ſay, The Divel is not ambitious to ſhew himſelf and his abilities before men, but his way is (ſo obſerved by many) to fit himſelf (for matter and words) to the genius and capacity of thoſe that he dealeth with. Dr. Dee, of himſelf, long before any Apparition, was a Cabaliſtical man, up to the ears, as I may ſay; as may appear to any man by his Monas Hieroglyphica, a book much valued by himſelf, and by him Dedicated at the firſt to Maximilian the Emperor, and ſince preſented (as here related by himſelf) to Rodolphe as a choice piece. It may be thought ſo by thoſe who eſteem ſuch books as Dr. Floid, Dr. Alabaſter, and of late Gafarell, and the like. For my part I have read him; it is ſoon don, it is but a little book: but I muſt profeſs that I can extract no ſenſe nor reaſon (ſound and ſolid) out of it: neither yet doth it ſeem to me very dark or myſtical. Sure we are that thoſe Spirits did act their parts ſo well with Dr. Dee, that for the moſt part (in moſt Actions) they came off with good credit; and we find the Dr. every where almoſt extolling his Spiritual teachers and inſtructers, and prayſing God for them. Little reaſon therefore have we to except againſt any thing (in this kind) that gave him content, which was their aim and buſineſs.

Secondly, I ſay, if any thing reliſh here of Trithemius or Paracelſus, or any ſuch, well may we conclude from thence, that the Divel is like himſelf. This is the trueſt inference. It is he that inſpired Trithemius and Paracelſus, &c. that ſpeaketh here; and wonder ye if he ſpeaks like them? I do not expect that all men will be of my opinion; yet I ſpeak no Paradoxes: I have both reaſon and authority good and plauſible, I think, for what I ſay; but to argue the caſe at large would be tedious. Of Trithemius ſomewhat more afterwards will be ſaid. But we muſt go far beyond that time. A thouſand years and above, before either of them was born, was the BOOK OF ENOCH well known in the world; and then alſo was Lingua Adami (upon which two moſt of the Cabala ſtands) much talked of, as appears by Greg. Niſſen his learned books againſt Eunomius the Heretick. To ſpeak more particularly (becauſe ſo much of it in this Relation) the BOOK OF ENOCH was written before Chriſt; and it is thought by ſome very learned (though denyed by others) that it is the very book that S. Jude intended. A great fragment of it in Greek (it was written in Hebrew firſt) is to be ſeen in Scaliger (that incomparable man, the wonder of his Age, if not rather of all Ages) his learned Notes upon Euſebius. It was ſo famous a book antiently that even Heathens took notice of it, and grounded upon it objections againſt Chriſtians. It may appear by Origen againſt Celſus, in his book 5. p. 275. Πάνυ δὲ συγκεχυμένος (ſaith he) ἐν τῇ περὶ τῶν ἐληλυθότων πρὸς ἀνθρώπους ἀγγέλων ἐξετάσει τίθησι τὰ ἀθρανώτως ἐλθόντα εἰς αὐτὸν, ἀπὸ τῶν ἐν τῷ Ενὼχ γεγραμμένων ἅτινα οὐδ᾽ αὐτὸς φαίνεται ἀναγνοὺς, οὐδὲ γνωρίσας ὅτι ἐν ταῖς Εκκλησίαις οὐ πάνυ φέρεται ὡς θεῖα τὰ ἐπιγεγραμμένα τῷ Ενωχ βιβλία. But S. Jerome and S. Auguſtin ſpeak of it more peremptorily as a fabulous book, and not allowed by the Church. How much of it is extant, beſides what we have in Scaliger, I know not; nor what part it is ſo often mentioned in this Relation. By what I have ſeen it doth appear to me a very ſuperſtitious, fooliſh, fabulous writing; or to conclude all in one word, Cabaliſtical, ſuch as the Divel might own very well, and in all probability was the author of. As for that conceit of the tongue which was ſpoken by Adam in Paradiſe, we have already ſaid that it is no late invention; and I make no queſtion but it proceeded from the ſame Author. Yea, thoſe very Characters commended unto Dr. Dee by his Spirits for holy and myſtical, and the original Characters (as I take it) of the holy tongue, they are no other, for the moſt part but ſuch as were ſet out and publiſhed long agoe by one Theſeus Ambroſius out of Magical books, as himſelf profeſſeth: you ſhall have a view of them in ſome of the Tables at the end of the Preface. Some letters are the ſame, others have much reſemblace in the ſubſtance; and in tranſcribing it is likely they might ſuffer ſome alteration. But it may be too the Spirits did not intend they ſhould be taken for the ſame, becauſe exploded by learned men, and therefore altered the forms and figures of moſt of them of purpoſe that they might ſeem new, and take the better. So that in all this the Divel is but ſtill conſtant unto himſelf, and this conſtancy ſtands him in good ſtead, to add the more weight and to gain credit to his Impoſtures. Not to be wondred therefore if the ſame things be found elſewhere, where the D. hath an hand.

With Cabaliſtical writings we may joyn Chymical, here alſo mentioned in many places. I have nothing to ſay to Chymiſtrie as it is meerly natural, and keeps it ſelf within the compaſs of ſobriety. It may wel go for a part of Phyſick, for ought I know, though many great Phyſicians, becauſe of the abuſe and danger of it, as I conceive, have done their beſt (formerly) to cry it down. I my ſelf have ſeen ſtrange things done by it: and it cannot be denyed but the wonders of God and Nature are as eminently viſible in the experiments of that Art as any other natural thing. However, it is not improbable that divers ſecrets of it came to the knowledg of man by the Revelation of Spirits. And the practice and profeſſion of it in moſt (them eſpecially that profeſs nothing elſe) is accompanied with ſo much Superſtition and Impoſture, as it would make a ſober man, that tendreth the preſervation of himſelf in his right wits, to be afraid of it. Of the Tranſmutation of Metals, what may be done by Art I will not take upon me to determine: I am apt enough to believe that ſome ſtrange things (in that kind) may be done, if a man will go to the coſt of it, and undergoe the trouble upon ſo much uncertainty of the event. But that which we call ordinarily, and moſt underſtand by it, The Phyloſophers Stone, is certainly a meer cheat, the firſt author and inventor whereof was no other then the Divel. Legi etiam Spirituum ſupernorum revelatione traditam antiquitùs artem faciendi Auri, & me ætate idem uſu eveniſſe, &c. ſaith one (Jo. Franc. Picus Mirandula) of the learnedſt Authors that I have ſeen of that ſubject, in defence of it, I meant. If he mean Supernos Spiritus, ſuch as appear in form of Angels of Light, ſuch as deluded Dr. Dee, and daily doth thoſe that hunt after Revelations, and Prophecies, and unlawful Curioſities, I grant it. But that any good Angels did ever meddle in a practice commonly attended with ſo much impoſture, impiety, couſenage as this commonly is, I ſhall not eaſily grant. Though I muſt add, I make great difference (if we will ſpeak properly) between Ars faciendi auri (a thing I do not deny to be feaſible by natural means) and that we call the Phyloſophers Stone, as before already intimated. And for that objection of his, why evil Spirits ſhould not be the Authors or revealers of it unto any (though otherwiſe for ſome other reaſons he thinks it probable) becauſe it is not likely that God would ſuffer them to give ſuch power unto men like themſelves, whom only among men they favour and reſpect, that is, wicked ungodly men. Firſt, I anſwer, That is a very weak objection, ſince we know by conſtant experience of preſent and future Ages, that they are not of the beſt of men commonly that are the greateſt and richeſt. But Secondly, There is no great cauſe to fear that any thing hitherto revealed (or hereafter to be revealed, I believe) of this ſecret, ſhould enable men (good or bad) to do much hurt in the world. The greateſt hurt is to themſelves who are deluded (yea, and beggerd many firſt or laſt) and to ſome few not very wiſe whom they couſen as themſelves have been couſened. And for this that they can do no more, we are beholding not to the Divel who certainly would not be vvanting to himſelf or to any opportunity to do miſchief by himſelf or his Agents, but to God vvho doth not give him the povver: So much to Mirandula, out of my reſpect to his name, and for the better ſatisfaction to the Reader. I ovve the ſight and uſe of the book to my Learned friend Dr. Windett before mentioned—. I am much confirmed in that opinion (of the Divel being the Author) by vvhat I find of it in the book vvhich hath given me this occaſion to ſpeak of it. Were there nothing elſe but the groſs and impudent forgeries that have been uſed to commend it unto men, ſome entituling the Invention to Adam himſelf, others to Solomon, and the like; and the many books that have been counterfeited to the ſame end; and again the moſt ridiculous and profane applying & expounding of Scriptures, a thing uſually done by moſt that are abettors of it, thoſe things vvere enough to make a man to abhor it. Sure enough it is, that not only Dr. Dee, but others alſo vvho had part of that precious Powder brought unto them by Spirits, and expected great matters of it, vvere all cheated and gull'd (and I believe it coſt ſome of them a good deal of money; Prince Roſemberg particularly) by thoſe Spiritual Chymiſts. Let them conſider of it that have been dealing in ſuch things as they ſhall ſee cauſe.

So ſtill we ſee, that in all theſe things, as we ſaid before, the Divel is not beholding to others, (as might be ſuſpected) but others have been beholding to him: As for his Divinity, in higheſt points, if he ſpake the truth, it was for his own ends, as we ſaid before: He can do it, who makes any queſtion? In controverted points, we may obſerve, that he doth ſerve the ſcene and preſent occaſion; and I make no queſtion, but had Dr. Dee gone to Conſtantinople, and been entertained there with reſpect, his Spirits there would have ſhewed themſelves as good Mahometans, as elſewhere good Roman Catholicks, or Proteſtants.

We have ſomewhere a very pretty Tale, (I would ſay a curious Obſervation, if I thought it true) concerning the nature of the Serpent or Addar, handſomly expreſſed, how ſhe traineth her yong ones to ſet them out abroad into the world, that they may ſhift for themſelves. Twenty days, as I remember, are ſpent in that work: Now whether it be ſo really, I cannot ſay certainly, but I ſuſpect it. It is not in Ariſtotle, and I looked in Aldrovandus, and I could not finde it: But whether it be ſo or no, let no body wonder; for this was the maner of Preaching formerly (and may be yet perchance in ſome places) among Monks and Fryars in great requeſt. They would make a ſtory of Man, or Beaſts, as they thought fit themſelves, and their Fancies beſt ſerved; pretty and witty, as much as they could; whether it had any ground of truth, or no, no man required: The moralization was good. If the Divel have done ſo here, it was not through ignorance (for he is too good a Naturaliſt; and I believe there is ſomewhat even in Nature, though we know it not, why both in ſacred and prophane Hiſtory, Spirits and Serpents are ſo often joyned) of which is true and real; but as hath been ſaid, it ſerved his turn, and that is enough. And although, having conſidered it as an Objection, how the Divel cometh to ſpeak ſo much truth, as will be found in this Book; no man, I think, will expect I ſhould give an account of any falſe Doctrine or Divinity, that it may contain: Yet one point I think fit to take notice of, and proteſt againſt it; as falſe, erronious, and of dangerous conſequence, and that is, where it is ſaid, That a man (in ſome caſes) may kill another man (Prince or other) without apparent cauſe, or lawful Authority, and therefore puniſhable by the Laws of Man; who nevertheleſs, may expect a great reward at the hands of God for his act: How this may agree with the Principles of New Lights, and Anabaptiſtical Divinity, I know not; it is very contrary to the Principles of that Orthodox Divinity, lately profeſſed and eſtabliſhed by Law in England.

I have now ſaid in this main Objection, (as I apprehended it) what I think was moſt proper and pertinent, and I hope may ſatiſfie. But I have ſomewhat elſe to ſay, which in this caſe of Divels and Spirits in general, I think it very conſiderable, and may ſatisfie perchance, in ſome caſes, where nothing elſe can. We talk of Spirits, and read of Spirits often, but I think it is very little that we know (the beſt of us all) of them, of their nature or differences: And how then can it be expected that we ſhould reſolve all doubts? And though I think it is not much that any man ever knew and rightly apprehended, or can, as he is a man, in this buſineſs; yet my opinion is, (though I know it is much gainſaid and oppoſed) that ancient Platonick Phyloſophers of the latter times, underſtood much more then moſt Chriſtians; I do not write this, as though I thought, or would have any thought by others to be the worſe Chriſtians for being ignorant in theſe things; but rather, in my opinion, any man the better Chriſtian, by much, who doth not regard it or deſire it: For my part, although I muſt acknowledge that ſome ſcruples of my minde, did induce me to look into many Books, until I was ſatisfied, which otherwiſe I had never done; yet I profeſs to believe, that it is ſo little that can be known by man in this ſubject, and ſubject to ſo much illuſion, as that I think no ſtudy is more vain and fooliſh; and that I would not go three ſteps out of my doors (more then what I did to ſatisfie my minde in ſome matters of Faith, if any ſuch ſcruple did ariſe) to know as much as the profoundeſt Platonick, or Phyloſopher, yea, or Magician of them all ever knew. Certainly he is but a weak Chriſtian, when ſo many high Myſteries are propoſed unto us in Chriſt by his Goſpel, and of ſo much conſequence, that cannot beſtow his time better: They that have any hopes, through Faith in Chriſt, and a godly life, to be admitted one day into the preſence of God, and to ſee face to face, as God hath promiſed; will they hazard ſo glorious a hope, by prying through unſeaſonable, unprofitable curioſity, into the nature of theſe vaſſal Spirits, which God hath forbidden: But becauſe it doth concern Religion in general, that we believe Spirits; and when Objections are made that cannot be anſwered, many are ſcandalized, and Atheiſts ready to take the advantage of it; I ſay, that it ſhould be no wonder to any, ſober and rational, if we cannot reſolve all doubts, ſince it is ſo little that we know, or can know, beyond the bare ὅτι in this matter: Moſt Chriſtians are bred in and to this opinion, that all Spirits, (ſo commonly called) are either Angels of Heaven, or Divels of Hell: I know no Scripture for it, or determination of any general Councel, that I remember, at this time at leaſt, and ſo long I do not think my ſelf bound againſt apparent reaſon: For the conceit of all evil Spirits or Divels being in Hell, I think learned Mr. Meade hath taken that to task in ſome of his Works, and ſufficiently confuted it: The very word Spirit, is a term of great Ambiguity; We underſtand by it, commonly, ſubſtances, that are altogether immaterial. Many of the ancient Fathers, it is well known, did not allow of any ſuch at all, beſides God: But we think that to have no viſible Body, and to be purely immaterial, is all one: God knows how many degrees there may be between theſe but we cannot know it, neither doth it concern our ſalvation, for which we have reaſon to praiſe God: But if it were ſo, that all Spirits are either Divels or Angels, what ſhall we make of theſe that are found in mines, of which learned Agricola hath written; of thoſe that have been time out of minde called κόβαλοι, (from whence probably, as we have ſaid elſewhere, Gobelin in Engliſh is derived) who live in private Houſes, about old Walls, and ſtalks of Wood, harmleſs otherwiſe, but very thieviſh, ſo frequent and ſo known in ſome Countreys, that a man may as well doubt whether there be any Horſes in England, becauſe there are none in ſome parts of the World; not found in all America, I think, till ſome were carried thither: Neither can I believe, that thoſe Spirits that pleaſe themſelves in nothing elſe but harmleſs ſports and wantonneſſe, ſuch as have been known in all Ages; ſuch as did uſe to ſhave the hairs of Plinius Secundus his Servants in the Night, as himſelf relates (a very creditable man, I am ſure) in his Epiſtles, and the like; that ſuch Spirits, I ſay, have any relation either to Heaven or to Hell: We might inſiſt in more particulars, but we do not deſire to dwell upon it at this time; and there is yet ſomewhat elſe to be ſaid: And what I have ſaid of ſome Platonicks, I did not intend thereby to juſtifie all their abſurd or ſuperſtitious Opinions in this Argument of Spirits: As they have ſearched farther into it then others (beſides damnable experience, having confounded Magick with Phyloſophy, yea almoſt turned all Phyloſophy into Magick) ſo it was conſequent, they would fall into more Errors and Abſurdities; yet withal, they have found ſomewhat that doth better agree with daily experience, then what is commonly known or believed. Sineſius was a Biſhop, but as he doth appear to us in his Writings, a better Platonick then a Chriſtian: In a place (in his Treatiſe De inſomniis) he ſheweth how evil Spirits come to inhabit men, and to poſſeſſe their Brains: His terms are very courſe, and apparantly ridiculous; but there may be ſome truth in the Opinion: For if there were not a very near and intimate conjunction, it were to be wondered how the Divel comes to know the very thoughts of Witches and Magicians, as is found by experience, averred by more then one: And in this very Book, if I be not miſtaken, ſomewhat may be obſerved to that purpoſe: It is poſſible there may be more kindes of poſſeſſion then one, and that ſome men, that never were ſuſpected, have had a ſpirit (beſides their own) reſident in them, all, or moſt part of their lives.

I have done, with what I could think of, upon which objection can be made: The next thing is to make the way clearer to the Reader, by ſome conſideration of the method of the Books, and explanation of ſome terms and phraſes there uſed, at which perchance ſome may ſtick at the firſt: At the very beginning a man may be to ſeek, it the Title of it, Liber ſexti myſteriorum, & ſancti parallelus, novaliſque. 1583. both as it relates to that which follows, and as it reflects upon ſomewhat before, by which it may be inferred that the book begins here abruptly and imperfectly: of this I am now ready to give an account to the Reader, and it is very fit it ſhould be done.

Firſt concerning Titles, ſuch as will be found here many more beſides this, the whole book, or relation being ſubdivided into many parts; in general I ſay, that according to the Doctors genius (we have ſaid before he was very Cabaliſtical, that is, full of whimſies and crotchets, under the notion of Myſteries, a thing that ſome very able, otherwiſe, have been ſubject unto) and the high opinion he had of theſe actions and apparitions; they are moſtly very concealed, and (to ſpeak the truth) phantaſtick, which muſt make them the Obſcurer: I could give the Reader a view of them all here put together, but it would be ſuperfluous: There be ſome fourteen or fifteen Diviſions in all now remaining, and ſo many Titles: There is a Table at the beginning, that doth refer to the beginning of every diviſion, where the Title alſo will be found: But at the end of the viii. Diviſion, I finde theſe words, Sequitur liber 24. qui hac die etiam inceptus eſt, à meridie: horam circiter tertiam, per ipſum Lavanael: But I finde nothing following, (but ſome vacant ſheets, till we come to the ix. Diviſion, Myſteriorum pragenſium, &c. And the laſt Diviſion hath onely ſome Fables, and before them, ſome five or ſix pages of unknown myſtical words, which we know not what to make of; but of that more afterwards: The main buſineſs to be reſolved here (as I take it) is what it is that we have, and what we have not, ſo far as can be gathered by what remaineth; we ſhall ſee what we can ſay to it. In the year of the Lord, One thouſand five hundred eighty four, September the third, (being a Monday) Dr. Dee firſt appeared (being preſented by Honorable perſons, and expected) before the Emperor Rodolph. Among other things he then told him, That for theſe two years and a half, Gods holy Angels had uſed to inform him: Our Book, or firſt Action here, beginneth 28 May, 1583. According to this reckoning, it muſt be, that above a year and three Moneths before, began the firſt Apparition: The account then of fifteen Moneths from the firſt Apparition, we want: How much (in bulk) that might come to, I cannot tell; neither will I warrant all perfect from this 28 of May, 1583 to the fourth of April 1587. though for the moſt part the coherence is right enough to that time: But from thence to the twentieth of March, 1607. is a vaſt chaſma or hiatus, of no leſs then twenty years: How this hath happened, I cannot tell certainly; what I gueſs, is this, ſome years after Dr. Dees death (   ) Sir Robert Cotton bought his Library (what then remained of it) with his Magical Table, (of which afterwards) and the Original Manuſcript, written With his own hand, whereof this is a Copy: The Book had been buried in the Earth, how long, years or moneths, I know not; but ſo long, though it was carefully kept ſince, yet it retained ſo much of the Earth, that it began to moulder and periſh ſome years ago, which when Sir Thomas C. (before mentioned) obſerved, he was at the charges to have it written out, before it ſhould be too late: Now full fifty years, or not many wanting, being paſſed ſince this Original came to Sir Robert, it is very likely, that had any more in all that time been heard of, Sir Robert, or Sir Thomas, his Son and Heir, would have heard of it, and got it as ſoon as any body elſe: And becauſe no more hath been heard of all this while, it is more then probable that no more is extant, not in England, nor I think any where elſe: Happily the reſt might periſh, ſome part, (if not all) even whileſt the Doctor lived; and we ſhall finde in this Relation, That a good part of his holy Books were burned, but (which is more ſtrange) a great part of them, by the help of Spirits, recovered and reſtored: Or it may be, that ſince his death, the reſt (the place where they lay being unknown) might rot in the earth; now if, as probably no more be extant, we may account this that we have here, in that reſpect perfect, becauſe here is all that can be had. But if any, (as it is the nature of many, if not moſt, rather to deſire that which cannot be had, then to content themſelves with that which may) ſhall much lament the loſs of the reſt, and be leſs pleaſed with this, becauſe ſo much (though indeed we know not certainly whether much or little) is wanting; I would deſire them to conſider with themſelves, in caſe there had been twice or thrice as much more as all this comes too, what ſhould have been done with it? For my part, for ſo much as is here ſet out (all we had) I thought it would do beſt, though ſomewhat long, yet as a thing very extraordinary, and of great conſequence to many good purpoſes and uſes; I thought, I ſay, it would do beſt to have it all Printed; Yet we had ſome conſideration about it, and it may be ſome others would have thought that leſs might have ſerved the turn: But I hope more will be of my minde, and there be but few actions but afford ſomewhat that is extraordinary, and for ſome reſpect or other obſervable and uſeful; Howſoever, I am confident, if all had been extant, (ſuppoſing that the reſt would have made much more) that none or very few would have thought fit to have Printed all; and if it had once come to a contraction or abridgement, it may be much leſs then this muſt have ſerved: It is free for all men to think as they pleaſe; for my part all things conſidered, I finde no great want of the reſt; and if I were put to it, I cannot tell whether I can ſay, that I wiſh more were extant: yet it gives me great content, (and I hope there is no Blaſphemy or Superſtition in it, if I aſcribe it to providence) that after that long intermiſſion, or hiatus, we have yet the laſt Actions of all, whereby it might appear, after many goodly ſhews and promiſes, ſo much hope and expectation; ſo many Prayers, ſo many Thankſgivings and Humiliations, what the end is of dealing with Divels, and uſing means that are not lawful, to compaſs ambitious unwarrantable deſires. Beſides, be it more or leſs that is wanting, yet I am confident we have the chiefeſt parts here preſerved; as particularly, an exact account of his addreſſes and dealings with the Emperor, and other great men and Princes, in the vii. and ſome following Diviſions; and that ſad ſtory of their promiſcuous Copulation, under the perſwaſion of obedience to God, very particularly related in the twelfth Diviſion; wherein as the cunning and malice of evil Spirits, to lead away from God, when they moſt pretend to God and godlineſs; ſo the danger of affected ſingularity and eminency, (the firſt ground of all this miſchief) of Spiritual pride and ſelf-conceit, is eminently ſet out to every mans obſervation, that is not already far engaged (as in theſe times too to many) in ſuch Principles.

But yet nevertheleſs I muſt acknowledge, that there is one part of the ſtory wanting, which I believe by moſt will be much deſired: For whereas at the very beginning, mention is made of a Stone, and that Stone not onely there mentioned, but afterwards in every action almoſt, and apparition, throughout the whole Book to the very end, ſtill occurring and commemorated as a principal thing; what it was, and how he came by it, yea and what became of it, would be known, if by any means it might: All that we are able to ſay of it, is this, It was a ſtone in which, and out of which, by perſons that were qualified for it, and admitted to the ſight of it; all Shapes and Figures mentioned in every Action were ſeen, and voices heard: The form of it was round, as appeareth by ſome courſe repreſentations of it in the Margins, as pag. 395. 399. b. 413 b. and it ſeems to have been of a pretty bigneſs: It ſeems it was moſt like unto Cryſtal, as it is called ſometimes, as pag. 80 Inſpecto Chryſtallo, and page 177. b. nihil viſibile apparuit in Chryſtallo Sacrato, præter ipſius cryſtalli viſibili formam. Every body knows by common experience, that ſmooth things are fitteſt for repreſentations, as Glaſſes and the like; but ordinarily ſuch things onely are repreſented, as ſtand oppoſite and are viſible in their ſubſtance. But it is a ſecret of Magick (which happily may be grounded, in part at leaſt, upon ſome natural reaſon, not known unto us) to repreſent Objects (externally not viſible) in ſmooth things: And Roger Bacon (alias Bacun) in a Manuſcript inſcribed, De dictis & factis falſorum Mathematicorum & Dæmonum communicated unto me by my Learned and much eſteemed Friend, Dr. Windett Profeſſor of Phyſick in London, hath an Obſervation to that purpoſe, in theſe words, Hiis Mathematicis in malitia ſuâ completis apparent Dæmones ſencibilitur in formâ humanâ & aliis formis variis, & dicunt & faciunt multa eis mirabilia ſecundum quod Deus permittit. Aliquando apparent imaginarie ut in ungue pueri virginis carminati; & in pelvibus & enſibus, & in ſpathulâ arietis ſecundum modum eorum conſecratis, & in cæteris rebus politii: & Dæmones oſtendunt eis omnia quæ petunt, ſecundum quod Deus permittit. Unde pueri ſic inſpicientes res politas vident imaginariè res furtivè acceptas & ad quem locum deportatæ ſunt, & quæ perſonæ aſportaverunt; & ſic de aliis, multis, dæmones apparentes omnia hæc illis pejus oſtendunt.

Joach. Camerarius (that worthy man before ſpoken of) in his Proemium to Plutarch, De Oraculis, &c. hath a ſtrange Story upon the credit of a friend of his whom he much reſpected (as himſelf profeſſeth) for his Piety and Wiſdom. A Gentleman of Norimberg had a Cryſtal (how he came by it, is there to be read) which had this vertue; Si qua de re certior fieri vellet, &c. if he deſired to know any thing paſt or future, that concerned him, yea or any other (in moſt things) let a young Boy (Caſtum, one that was not yet of Age, &c.) look into it, he ſhould firſt ſee a man in it, ſo and ſo apparelled, and afterwards what he deſired: No other but a Boy, ſo qualified, could ſee any thing in it. This Cryſtal became very famous in thoſe parts; yea ſome learned men came to it to be ſatisfied in doubtful points, and had their queſtions reſolved: Yet at laſt, (as well it deſerved) it was broken in pieces by Camerarius his Friend. Many ſuch ſtories are to be found of Magical Stones and Cryſtals: And though Fernelius, De abditis rerum cauſis; and after him (as I remember) one, in worth and eſteem of all men, not inferior to Fernelius, Dr. Harvey, lately deceaſed, turns the relation of a ſtrange ſtone brought to one of the late Kings of France, into an Allegory, or Phyſical explication of the power and proprieties of the Element of Fire; yet I am not ſatisfied, but that the relation might be literally true: For ſo it is, (as I remember here alſo, for I have none of thoſe Books by me at this time) related by Thuanus, and ſo by ſome others, very learned, underſtood.

Now for the maner how he came by it, the particulars of the ſtory cannot be had by this here preſerved, but onely this in general, That it was brought unto him by ſome, whom he thought to be Angels: So we finde him telling the Emperor, That the Angels of God had brought to him a Stone of that value, that no earthly Kingdom is of that worthineß, as to be compared to the vertue or dignity thereof. Page 272. in his conference with Dr. Curts, appointed by the Emperor to treat with him; and alſo let him ſee the ſtone brought me by Angelical Miniſtery: And we finde this Note recorded, [Prague, Tueſday 25 Septembris, I went to Dinner to the Spaniſh Ambaſſador, and carried with me the Stone brought me by an Angel, and the fourth Book, wherein the maner of the bringing of it is expreſſed.] And for the uſe of the Stone, beſides what hath been ſaid, this is obſervable: Some Spirits being in ſight of E. K. out of the Stone, Dr. Dee would have the Stone brought forth, but E. K. ſaid, He had rather ſee them thus, out of the Stone; to which the Doctor replies, That in the Stone they had warrant that no wicked Spirits ſhould enter; but without the Stone illuders might deal with them, unleß God prevented it, &c. From which paſſage alſo we may learn, as from divers others in the Book that although the ſtone (as we ſaid before) was the place, in which, and out of which, ordinarily, moſt Apparitions were framed, yet it was not ſo always: For we ſhall meet with divers things in that kinde that were ſeen and heard, without any reference to the Stone: From the ſame place alſo we may learn, that the ſaid Stone was the ſame he alſo called the Shew-ſtone; as in many places beſides. However, it is certain enough that he had more Stones then one, which he accounted ſacred; obſerve Principal Stone, and this other Stone; & firſt Sanctified Stone, uſual Shew-ſtone, and Holy-ſtone, may be thought oppoſed and different; but I underſtand it otherwiſe: This is the account we can give of this principal Holy-Stone. And to ſupply the defect of the maner how it was brought to him, the Reader, if he pleaſe, may finde ſome ſatisfaction, if he read the maner how it was taken away, and reſtored, very particularly ſet down, as before (upon another occaſion) was obſerved.

Beſides this Stone or Stones, there are divers other ſacred things mentioned, that belonged to this perſonated Sanctuary, but nothing more frequently mentioned then Curtains; a Curtain or Vail, as it is ſometimes called. A man would think at firſt, perchance, that it was ſomewhat outward, but it will be found otherwiſe; it was ſeen in the Stone, and appeared of different forms and colours, as they that read will quickly finde.

Next unto theſe the Holy Table is chiefly conſiderable, ordering of it is referred to Dr. Dee, which he durſt not take upon himſelf, until he had warrant from his Spiritual Teachers: This Table, which may well be called Magical, is preſerved and to be ſeen in Sir Thomas Cottons Library (from whence we had the reſt) and by his leave is here repreſented in a braſs Cut; mention is made of it, as I take it, where Dr. Dee propoſeth to his Teachers, Whether the Table (for the middle croſs of uniting the 4 principal parts) be made perfect or no: You may ſee more of it, it is alſo called League Table, Table of Covenant, menſa fœderis in ſome places: The Pedeſtal of it is mentioned in two or three places, and indeed a very curious Frame belonging unto it, yet to be ſeen in the ſaid Library. But I know not what to make of that, neither Nalu: nor the Table appeareth; and the round Table or Globe appeared not. I believe it muſt be underſtood of ſomewhat that had appeared before in the ſtone. The Reader that will be ſo curious, by careful reading may ſoon finde it out; I was not willing to beſtow too much time upon it.

But here remaineth a main buſineſs whereof we are to give an account to the Reader: There were many Tables or Schemes at the end of the Book, containing Letters, a. b. c. &c. diſpoſed into little ſquares, with an Inſcription over each Table in that unknown Character (before ſpoken of) expreſſed in uſual Letters how it ſhould be read. There is one for a Specimen here at the end of the Preface; the reſt were omitted, becauſe it was judged needleſs, except it were to increaſe the price of the Printed book. For firſt, Dr. Dee himſelf, though he took a great deal of pains to underſtand the Myſtery of them, and had great hopes given him from time to time to reap the benefit (himſelf complains of it in more then one place) of his toilſome work and long patience, yet it never came to any thing: and if he made nothing of them (to benefit himſelf thereby) what hopes had we? Beſides, we may judge of theſe Tables, and all this myſtery of Letters, by what we have ſeen in others of the ſame kinde. Johannes Trithemius was a man that was ſuppoſed by moſt to have dealt with Spirits a long time, and to have been inſtructed by them in ſome of thoſe ſecrets that he pretends unto by his Books. I know ſome have thought him innocent, or at leaſt, have attempted to juſtifie him: Some affect ſuch things to ſhew their wit, and think they ſhall be thought much wiſer then other men, if they contradict received Opinions, though their vanity and ſtrong conceit of their own parts, be their chief, if not onely ground. Learned and Judicious Maſter Voſſius, hath ſhewed himſelf very willing to think the beſt of him and his Books; yet he gives it over at laſt, and rather concludes on the contrary. They that dare defend Apollonius, the greateſt upholder of Ethniciſm that ever was, and by moſt Heathens accounted either a God, or a Magician, need not ſtick at any thing in this kinde: But ſay he was, what any man will have of him, (Frithemius we ſpeak of, his Polygraphy, he ſet out in his life time, dedicated to the then Emperor: He tells the World of the greateſt wonders to be done by it, that ever were heard of: All Wiſdom and Arts, all Languages, Eloquence, and what not, included in it. But I never heard of any man that could make any thing of it or reaped any benefit in any kinde; which I think is the reaſon that his Steganography, mentioned and promiſed in this firſt work was ſo long after his death before it was Printed: It was expected it would have given ſome light to the firſt; but neither of that nor of this latter, could ever any thing, that ever I could hear, be made by any man. I have good ground for what I ſay: For beſides what others have acknowledged, I finde learned Viginaire, (who in his old age was grown himſelf very Cabaliſtical, or it may be had ſome diſpoſition that way, though very learned otherwiſe, from his natural temper) as much grounded in that book, as any man before him: He doth plainly profeſs he could make nothing of it: And truly if he could not, that had beſtowed ſo much time and pains in thoſe unprofitable ſtudies, I ſee little hopes that any man elſe ſhould. It would make a man almoſt hate Learning, to ſee what dotage, even the moſt learned, are ſubject unto: I could bleſs them that know but little, ſo themſelves knew it is but little that they know, and were humble: But it commonly falls out otherwiſe, that they that know but little, think that little to be much, and are very proud of it; whereas much knowledge (or to ſpeak properly, more knowledge) if well uſed, hath this advantage that it makes men moſt ſenſible of their ignorance. The reading of Vigenaires book of Cyphers (which I once thought a rare piece, as many other things of the ſame Author, which I had read) hath expreſſed theſe words from me in this place; and becauſe it hath ſo much affinity with our preſent Theme, I was the bolder; But to return. Upon this conſideration, the Reader I hope, will not be ſorry the reſt of the Tables (being many in number) were omitted. Though I muſt adde withal, had I known or thought any uſe could be made of them, having no better opinion of the Author (him or them) I mean, from whom Dr. Dee had them) I ſhould not have been very forward to have had a hand in their coming abroad.

I ſhould have told the Reader before but it may do well enough here, that beſides the particulars before ſpecified, there were other things that belonged to this holy Furniture (as Dr. Dee ſomewhere doth ſpeak) whereof mention is made in ſome places: as Carpet, Candleſtick, Taper, Table-Cloth, Cuſhion, and ſome others perchance. But I know nothing needs be obſerved upon any

any of theſe. I make no queſtion but the Divel in all theſe things had a reſpect to the Ceremonial Law eſpecially; as alſo in thoſe words, Move not, for the place is holy, often repeated, which are alſo elſewhere expounded: The Interlocutors in all this relation, are, Δ. (that is, Dr. Dee) and E. K. that is Edw. Kelley; and the Spirits, to the number of ſome twenty, or thereabouts, ſo many named: (Madini, Eſemeli, Merifri, Ath, Galuah, Il, Jubenladece, Gabriel, Jam, Moreorgran, Aph, Lasben, Uriel, Naluage, Mapſama, Aue, Ilemeſe, Gaza, Vaa, Leveanael, Ben,) at leaſt, but whether all Interlocutors, I know not, becauſe I do not remember, neither doth it much concern.

There be divers marginal Notes and Obſervations, which being of Dr. Dee his own, are for the moſt part not inconſiderable, and ſome very remarkable, all therefore here exhibited; but whereas in ſome places he had attempted to repreſent the apparition, or ſome part of it, in Figures alſo; this being done but ſometimes, and in caſe it had been done oftner (except it were to ſatisfie the childiſh humor of many Buyers of Books in this Age, when becauſe they buy not to read, muſt have ſomewhat to look upon; whence it comes to paſs, that much traſh doth paſs for good ware, for the trimming ſake, and on the contrary) of little uſe, no notice is taken of it; except ſome Figure be in the Text it ſelf, and of ſome conſequence, for the better underſtanding of the reſt.

The Greek, p. 25. b. is exactly ſet out, as it was found, and yet to be ſeen in the original, written by Dr. Dee himſelf: But little or nothing can be made of it, as it is written; and it is a ſign that Dr. Dee who writ it, as Edw. Kelley reported it unto him, and afterwards plodded upon it (as doth appear by ſome Conjectures and Interpretations found in the original, and here alſo exhibited) as well as he could. was no very perfect Grecian; much leſs Edw. Kelley, who could not ſo much as read it, which made Dr. Dee to write ſome things that he would not have Kelley to read, in Greek Characters, though the words were Engliſh: I would not alter any thing that was in the Original: But the words, I believe ſpoken by the Spirit (and ſo the Greek is warrantable enough) were theſe, Οὗτος ὁ ἑταῖρος τοῦτο ἔργον ἀναστήσει: Κόσμος γὰρ πρόθελυμος τυγχάνει ὤν: Καὶ αὐτὸ; τοσοῦτον πειράζεται: Ὥστε κοίνης ἀφελκύσθαι φιλίας: Ἐσέρα μή τινα αὐτῷ ἀφορμὴν παρέξῃς: Τὰς γὰρ ἀπάτας κομιδῇ παρασκευάζεται: Ἵνα σε διὰ παντὸς ἀπολείπῃ: This I think was intended of Edw. Kelley, who was ever and anon upon projects to break with Dr. Dee, and to be gone, as here preſently after, and in divers other places of this relation; nay, did really forſake him ſometimes for ſome time: The ſence verbatim is this: This fellow (or Friend) will overthrow this work (of Apparitions you muſt underſtand, to which he was requiſite, becauſe the Divel had not that power over Dr. Dees Body, to fit it, though he did promiſe it him, for ſuch ſights.) His baggage (or furniture) is in a readineſs. And he doth very much endeavor: To withdraw himſelf from this common friendſhip. Take heed, that you give him no occaſion: For he doth mightily plot by art and cunning: How he may leave you for ever. Πρόθελυμος, in the firſt line, may ſeem unuſual, for ἕτοιμος, or πρόθυμος; but it is an elegant Metaphore. Πειράζεται for πειράζει, is not uſual; and happily it ſhould have been πειρᾶται, and ſo uttered; but that is nothing. Certainly he that could ſpeak ſo much Greek, (called here Syrian, to jeer Ed. Kelley) could not want Latine at any time to expreſs himſelf; which nevertheleſs, might be thought, where we finde him ſpeaking Engliſh, to them that underſtood it not; ſo that Dr. Dee was fain to interpret it: But we cannot give an account of all his fetches and projects: He had a conſideration, I make no queſtion.

I cannot think of any thing elſe that the Reader need to be told, that is of this nature, and it may be ſomewhat might have been ſpared: However the Reader will conſider, that as in all Books, ſo in this: It is one thing to read from the beginning, and ſo to go on with heed and obſervation, without skipping; and another thing to read here and there, which would require a perpetual Comment, which is the wretchedneſs of moſt Readers, in theſe declining days of Learning; and therefore they have Comments (or Rhapſodies rather) accordingly; ſimiles habent labra lactuſes, never more true of any thing.

It may be ſome will wonder what made the Spirits to fall upon Engliſh Genealogies and Stories; it is at very beginning, therefore I take notice of it for the Readers ſake, that is yet (and cannot otherwiſe) a ſtranger to the Book: The buſineſs is, Dr. Dee was lately grown into great league and confederacy with Albert Lasky, (or à laſco rather) a great man of Polonia. You had before what Cambden ſaith of him of his coming to England, at this very time, and his going away, which doth very well agree with our dates here. It ſeems, though nobly born, and to great dignity, yet his thoughts did aſpire much higher; and though no rich man, for a man of his rank and quality, yet expecting ſuch matters from Dr. Dee and his Spirits, as he did, he could finde money enough to ſupply their wants upon occaſion. The Spirits were very glad of the occaſion, and did what they could to cheriſh him according to his humor: Being then at that very time upon deliberations, that much depended of Alb Laskey and his good opinion; among other things, his Pedegree, which muſt needs pleaſe a vain man very well, was taken into conſideration: That every thing there ſaid, doth exactly agree to the truth, as I do not warrant it, ſo neither am I at leiſure at this time to take the pains to examine. We muſt never look further in thoſe things that are delivered by ſuch, then if it were, or be pertinent (true or falſe) to their end and preſent occaſion. Beſides, it is very poſſible, (which I deſire the Reader to take good notice of) that both here and elſewhere the Tranſcribers, as they could not read ſometimes, and were forced to leave ſome blancks (though ſeldome to any conſiderable prejudice of the ſence) ſo they might miſtake alſo, having to do with an Original that was (and is yet to be ſeen) ſo defaced and worm-eaten as this is, written (as we have ſaid) by Dr. Dee himſelf.

Beſides the authentickneſs of the Original Copy, written by Dr. Dee himſelf; the Reader may know, that the Originals of the Letters that are here exhibited, are all, or moſt of them yet preſerved, and to be ſeen in Sir Tho. Cottons Library.

IV. I am now come to the laſt of the four things that I promiſed, to ſhew the ſeveral good uſes that may be made of this Book, and which were principally looked upon in the publiſhing of it. This order indeed I propoſed to my ſelf, but great part of this occaſion offering it ſelf upon other matter, is already performed in the former Diſcourſe, ſo that but little is now left to be done: However I will ſum them up, and repreſent them together, that every Reader may have them in readineſs and in view for his uſe the better.

The firſt is againſt Atheiſts, and ſuch as do not believe that there be any Divels or Spirits: We have argued it, I confeſs, pretty largely, at the beginning of this Diſcourſe or Preface, and I hope ſome may receive competent ſatiſfaction by what we have ſaid: But if no Argument had been uſed, (ſetting aſide Scripture Authority, which would be impertinent againſt Atheiſts) I do not know what can be more convincing then this ſad Story, ſo exactly ſo particularly, ſo faithfully delivered. Truly, they muſt ſee further then I do, that can finde what to anſwer (rationally) and to oppoſe: This is a great point, and a great ground of Religion; but this is not all: For if there be Spirits indeed, ſo wicked and malicious, ſo ſtudious and ſo induſtrious, to delude men, and to do miſchief, which is their end, all which is ſo fully repreſented in this Relation; then certainly muſt it follow, that there is a great over-ruling Power, that takes care of the Earth, and of the Inhabitants of it; of them eſpecially that adore that Power, and worſhip it with true affection and ſincerity: For without this over ruling Power, what a miſerable World ſhould we have? What man ſober or innocent, that could enjoy himſelf at any time with any comfort or ſecurity? But again, what man can read this ſad ſtory and can be ſo perſwaded of his own Wiſdom or innocency, but will in ſome degree reflect upon himſelf, and will be moved to praiſe God, that notwithſtanding many provocations in ſeveral kindes (as damnable curioſity, open prophaneneſs, frequent Oathes, Curſes, Perjuries, ſcandalous Life, and the like) God hath been pleaſed to protect and preſerve him from the force and violence of ſuch enemies of mankinde?

I ſaid before, from leſs beginnings greateſt confuſions had enſued, which is very true as in the caſe of Bacchus particularly many Ages before; and in the caſe of Mahomet afterwards (two notable lewd Enthuſiaſts, by whom as Inſtruments, evil Spirits, by Gods permiſſion, brought great alterations in Governments, and wrought much miſchief and villany among Men and Women) we ſhall elſewhere ſhew more at large. By due conſideration of all Circumſtances, as chiefly their confident and reiterated Addreſſes unto, and Attempts upon ſo many great men in Power and Authority, and the like; I am much of opinion that theſe Spirits had as great hopes of Dr. Dee, as ever they had of Bacchus or Mahomet. But God was not pleaſed at that time to permit that their malice and ſubtilty ſhould prevail. And I think, if we conſider it well, we have reaſon to praiſe God for it. England might have been over-run with Anabaptiſm (when I ſay Anabaptiſm, I mean Anabaptiſm confirmed and in full power, not as it appears in its firſt pretentions) long before this: God be thanked that it was not then and God keep it from it ſtill, I hope is the Prayer of all truly ſober and Religious And in very deed I know no reaſon, but the Wiſdom and prudence of their Majeſties Councel that then were, in oppoſing Dr. Dees frequent addreſſes and Sollicitations, may (under God) challenge and deſerve ſome part of our Thanks and Acknowledgement.

Again, The Divel we ſee can Pray and Preach, (as to outward appearance we mean; for truly and really, God forbid that any thing ſacred and holy ſhould be thought to proceed from Divels) and talk of Sanctity and Mortification, as well as the beſt. And what he can in his own perſon, or by himſelf immediately;

diately; there is no queſtion, but he doth by his Miniſters and Inſtruments much more, more ordinarily and frequently I mean: Let any man judge then, whether it be the part of a ſober wiſe man, not onely to hear ſuch men as can give no account of their calling, but alſo to follow them, to embrace their Doctrine, to be of their number or Congregation; and all this, upon this account, becauſe they can pray and preach very well, (as they think and judge at leaſt) and talk very godlily and zealouſly? How much more inexcuſable they that will cleave unto ſuch, though they ſee and know them ſcandalous in their Lives, Proud, Inſolent, Ignorant, Seditious, Intolerable, becauſe they can pray, and preach, and talk, as beſt agreeth with their own humor, and gives them beſt content? Can any man think they follow God in this, who would have all things done in order, and is not a God of Confuſion, (1 Cor. 14. 33, 40.) when all they do, tends to nothing elſe but diſorder and confuſion? I confeſs it is poſſible, that men lawfully called may prove bad enough, we have divers examples in the Scripture. But if a man, ſimply and ignorantly be miſ-led by ſuch, certainly his judgement will be much lighter then they can expect, who will not uſe the means that God hath ordained, in ſo great and weighty a buſineſs as the ſalvation of Souls is. I know not what theſe men can ſay for themſelves, except it be, that they are reſolved to make uſe of the Liberty of the times to pleaſe their humor; they may do it, but if that bring them to Heaven, they have good luck.

But the buſineſs of praying, is that I would principally inſiſt upon: You ſee here how Dr. Dee, where he gives an account of himſelf to the Emperor, and others, bears himſelf much upon this, that ſo many years he had been an earneſt Suitor unto God by Prayer to obtain Wiſdom, ſuch wiſdom as he was ambitious of. I believe him, that he had prayed very earneſtly, and with much importunity many times: This was the thing that made him ſo confident of his Spirits, that they muſt needs be good Spirits and Angels. I know a man, I have no comfort to tell it, but that I would not conceal any thing that may be a warning unto others, and yet I will have a reſpect unto him too: But I knew one, a very innocent man (in his outward converſation, and as I believe very really) Humble, Religious, very Learned and Orthodox, and one that had ſuffered for his Conſcience, as others have done in theſe times: This worthy man, being engaged in a controverted Argument, upon which his phancy had wrought very much, or rather which had much wrought upon his phancy; he had written much, filled much Paper, and was deſirous to communicate unto me as his friend what he had done: But when I perceived that the drift of his writing was out of the Law and the Prophets, to ſhew the neceſſity of ſome things which I thought of a more indifferent nature; I was not willing to meddle with it; and begun to argue againſt his main drift, and to ſhew my diſliking. After many words to and fro, he began to preſs me with this, that he had often prayed with much earneſtneſs, and he was very confident that God had heard his Prayers: Yea, he proceeded ſo far, that if God were true, he could not be deceived, and uſed many other words to the ſame purpoſe, at which I was much amazed, but could could do no good upon him, ſuch was his confidence and violence upon this occaſion, though otherwiſe a very moderate ingenuous man: And thus I found him more then once, or twice. Truly, I think God was very merciful unto him, that took him away in good time. But certainly this buſineſs of Prayer and praiſing, is a buſineſs as of great comfort (the greateſt that mortal man is capable of upon earth) ſo of much more danger and deluſion, then many do believe. And if caution and circumſpection be to be uſed in any thing that belongs to Religion, I think it ought in Prayer, as much as any thing. And ſince I have adventured to tell one ſtory upon mine own credit, I will tell one more upon better authority, which I have long deſired (for the obſervableneſs of it) to communicate unto the world, and to that end, had once inſerted it in a Treatiſe of mine, which I thought would have been Printed, but it was not: I will firſt give the Engliſh of it, that all men may reap the benefit, and then ſet it down in the words of my Author (mine own Father Iſaac Caſaubon, of b. m.) as I have it to ſhew under his hand.

At a Conſiſtory in Geneva, upon a Friday, 18 July, 1589. The caſe of one Mr. Nicholas being there propoſed to the Aſſembly to be conſidered of, who was wont to inſinuate himſelf into private Houſes, under pretence of praying, and made ſmall congregations: The buſineſs was diſliked by the Paſtors; Firſt, becauſe nothing in the Church of God ought to be done without order. Secondly, becauſe to turn ſuch duties of Religion to matter of Traffick to get money onely, (without any other end or calling) was not lawful. Thirdly and laſtly, his battalogy, (or vain repetition of words) was not to be ſuffered: Then upon this occaſion it was related by Mr. Beza, that the Saturday before, whileſt that ſharp conflict was, which we had before our eyes, (to wit, between the Genevians, and the Duke of Savoys Forces) that a certain Woman addreſſed her ſelf to him, ſaying, What Mr. Beza, will you make Prayers here? To which he had anſwered, No: What, do you think I do behold theſe things with mine eyes onely, and do not pray to God in my heart? Giving this reaſon for his anſwer he had made to the Woman: [It is not ſo expreſſed in the Latine, that the following words were Beza's words, but the coherence of matter doth ſo require it] That Prayer was certainly a holy thing, which it did not become any man to apply himſelf unto, (or to undertake) without due preparation: And that they were deceived, who thought it ſo eaſie a thing to pray rightly: And that care alſo ſhould be taken leſt [under a colour of zeal and devotion] a way be made to ſuperſtition: The Latine words are theſe, [Die Veneris, Julii 18. 1589. Cùm relatum eſſet in cœtum, de Mag. Nicolao, qui inſinuaret ſe in domos varias προφάσει τȣ̃ εὔχεσθαι, & ita aliquando cœtus, etſi paruos, coire ſolitos, paſtoribus res improbata eſt: Primùm, quia extra ordinem, nihil in Dei Eccleſia fieri debet: Deinde, quia πορισμὸν facere τὴν θρησκείαν, *nefas. In the laſt place, All men may take warning by this example, how they put themſelves out of the protection of Almighty God, either by preſumptuous unlawful wiſhes and deſires, or by ſeeking not unto Divels onely, directly (which Dr. Dee certainly never did, but abhorred the thought of it in his heart) but unto them that have next relation unto Divels, as Witches, Wizzards, Conjurers, Aſtrologers, (that take upon them to foretell humane events) Fortune-tellers, and the like, yea and all Books of that ſubject, which I doubt, were a great occaſion of Dr. Dees deluſion: That men are commonly cheated by ſuch, is ſure enough; and thoſe that are not very fools, would take heed how they deal with them, and avoid them, to avoid the Imputation of Fools; but thoſe that are wiſe, much more, if they can more then cheat; for the more they can do, the more they know they have of the Divel in them: Wretched people! that will not, dare not truſt God, who as he is the onely fountain of goodneſs, ſo onely knows what is good for every man. They may rejoyce for a time, and applaud themſelves in their conceited ſucceſſes, but miſery, if they repent not, will be their end; and it is a great ſign that God is very angry with them, when he doth ſuffer them to thrive by means which Himſelf hath curſed.

POSTSCRIPT.

SInce this Preface was written, and almoſt printed, I was ſhewed a Book, entituled, Theatrum Chemicum Britannicum, &c. by Elias Aſhmole Eſq; and in ſome Annotations there, at the end, an account concerning Dr. Dee and Edw. Kelley, (there ſtiled Sir Edward Kelley) out of a Diary of Dr. Dees, all written with his own hand: As I do not queſtion the Gentlemans fidelity in this buſineſs, ſo I make as little queſtion but Dr. Dee's own hand will be found to agree in all matters of Fact both here and there, if any ſhall take the pains to compare. And it may be the Reader may receive ſome further ſatisfaction in ſome particulars by his labor, which is the reaſon that I mention the Book here, being but lately come to my knowledge; His Judgement either concerning Dr. Dee, or Kelley, I meddle not with; and it may be, had he ſeen what is here to be ſeen, he would have been of another opinion in ſome things. Here is enough, I am ſure, to ſatisfie any man that is not very much preoccupied, or otherwiſe engaged by particular ends. As for thoſe Reports concerning Kelley, (ſome whereof concern Dr. Dee alſo) he tells us of, as I believe him, that he hath heard ſo, ſo I muſt (and may truly) profeſs, that I have met with far contrary, and in my judgement, and by this account here given us by Dr. Dee, much more probable: And particularly, that Kelley was put in Priſon by the Emperor, for a notable Chymical cheat that he had put upon him; the particulars whereof, though they were fully related unto me, yet I will not adventure upon, leſt I miſtake in ſome terms of art, or petty circumſtance of fact. And let the Reader judge by that account, Dr. Dee (who beſt knew) doth give us here throughout the whole Book of this Kelley, whether Wevers Story in his Funeral Monum. pag. 45, 46. of damnable Necromancy, and other Diabolical Conjuration, practiced by Kelley in Lancaſhire, be not (beſides what is there ſaid and atteſted) much more probable, then any thing that hath been or can be ſaid by others, to his juſtification or commendation: Which indeed doth make Doctor Dee's caſe altogether inexcuſable, that believing and knowing the man to be ſuch a one, he would have to do with him, and expected good by his Miniſteries; but that the Doctor his Faith, and his intellectualls (through Gods juſt judgement, as we have ſaid) were ſo much in the power and government of his Spirits, that they might perſwade him to any thing, under colour of doing ſervice unto God, yea had it been to cut his own Fathers throat, as we ſee in the Relation, that they perſwaded him to lie with another mans Wife, and proſtitute his own to a vile, and, by himſelf belived, Diabolical man.

Beſides, I have been told by many, that Dr. Dee, very poor and every way miſerable, dyed at Mortlack, here about London, which doth not ſeem to agree with the report in thoſe Annotations: But enough of them: Neither indeed have I ſaid any thing at all of purpoſe to oppoſe the Author, but to give this further ſatisfaction to the Reader, or rather to the truth, which I thought I was bound to do.

The paſſage in Wevers Funeral Monuments, pag. 45, 46. concerning Kelley, for their ſatisfaction that have not the Book, is this; Kelley, (otherwiſe called Talbot) that famous Engliſh Alchymiſt of our times, who flying out of his own Countrey (after he had loſt both his ears at Lancaſter) was entertained by Rodolph the ſecond, and laſt of that Chriſtian name, Emperor of Germany; for whom Elizabeth of famous memory, ſent (very ſecretly) Captain Peter Gwyn, with ſome others, to perſwade him to return back to his own Native home, which he was willing to do; and thinking to eſcape away in the night, by ſtealth, as he was clammering over a Wall in his own Houſe in Prague (which bears his name to this day, and ſometimes was an old Sanctuary) he fell down from the Battlements, broke his leggs, and bruiſed his body, of which hurts within a while after, he departed this World.

Sed quorſum hæc? you will ſay: Then thus, This Diabolical queſtioning of the dead, for the knowledge of future accidents, was put in practice by the ſaid Kelley, who upon a certain Night, in the Park of Walton in le dale, in the County of Lancaſter, with one Paul Waring, (his fellow-companion in ſuch Deeds of darkneſs) invocated ſome one of the Infernal Regiment, to know certain paſſages in the life, as alſo what might be known by the Divels foreſight, of the manner and time of the death of a Noble yong Gentleman, as then in Wardſhip. The Black Ceremonies of that Night being ended, Kelley demanded of one of the Gentlemans ſervants, what Corſe was the laſt buryed in Law Church-yard, a Church thereunto adjoyning, who told him of a poor man that was buryed there but the ſame day: He and the ſaid Waring, intreated this foreſaid ſervant to go with them to the Grave of the man ſo lately interred, which he did; and withal, did help them to dig up the Carcaſe of the poor Catiff, whom by their Incantations, they made him (or rather ſome evil Spirit through his Organs) to ſpeak, who delivered ſtrange Predictions concerning the ſaid Gentleman. I was told thus much by the ſaid Serving-man, a Secondary Actor in that diſmal abhorred buſineſs; and divers Gentlemen and others are now living in Lancaſhire, to whom he hath related this Story. And the Gentleman himſelf (whoſe memory I am bound to honor) told me a little before his death, of this Conjuration by Kelley, as he had it by relation from his ſaid Servant and Tenant, onely ſome circumſtances excepted, which he thought not fitting to come to his Maſters knowledge.

Dr. Dee's Apology,

Sent to the Arch-Biſhop of CANTERBURY. 159$\frac{4}{5}$.

OR,

A Letter containing a moſt brief Diſcourſe Apogeticall, with a plain Demonſtration, and fervent Proteſtation for the lawfull, ſincere, very faithfull and Chriſtian courſe of the Philoſophicall Studies and Exerciſes, of a certain ſtudious Gentleman: An ancient Servant to Her moſt Excellent Majeſty Royall.

To the moſt Reverend Father in God, the Lord Archbiſhop of Canterbury, Primate and Metropolitane of all England, one of Her Majeſties moſt Honorable Privie Councell: my ſingular good Lord.

MOſt humbly and heartily I crave your Graces pardon, if I offend any thing, to ſend, or preſent unto your Graces hand, ſo ſimple a Diſcourſe as this is: Although, by ſome ſage and diſcreet my friends their opinion, it is thought not to be impertinent, to my moſt needfull ſuits, preſently in hand, (before her moſt Excellent Majeſty Royall, your Lordſhips good Grace, and other the Right Honourable Lords of her Majeſties Privy Councell) to make ſome part of my former ſtudies, and ſtudious exerciſes (within and for theſe 46 years laſt paſt, uſed and continued) to be firſt known and diſcovered unto your Grace, and other the right Honourable, my good Lords of her Majeſties privy Councell: And ſecondly, afterwards, the ſame to be permitted to come to publick view: Not ſo much, to ſtop the mouthes, and, at length to ſtay the impudent attempts, of the raſh, and malicious deviſers, and contrivers of moſt untrue, fooliſh, and wicked reports, and fables, of, and concerning my foreſaid ſtudious exerciſes, paſſed over, with my great, (yea incredible) paines, travells, cares, and coſts, in the ſearch, and learning of true Philoſophie; As, therein, So, to certifie, and ſatisfie the godly and unpartiall Chriſtian hearer, or reader hereof: That, by his own judgement, (upon his due conſideration, and examination of this, no little parcell, of the particulars of my foreſaid ſtudies, and exerciſes philoſophicall annexed) He will, or may, be ſufficiently informed, and perſwaded; That I have wonderfully laboured, to find, follow, uſe, and haunt the true, ſtraight, and moſt narrow path, leading all true, devour, zealous, faithfull, and conſtant Chriſtian ſtian ſtudents, ex valle hac miſeriæ, & miſeria iſtius vallis: & tenebrarum Regno; & tenebris iſtius Regni, ad montem ſanctum Syon & ad cœleſtia tabernacula. All thanks, are moſt due, therefore, unto the Almighty: ſeeing, it ſo pleaſed him, (even from my youth, by his divine favour, grace, and help) to inſinuate into my heart, an inſatiable zeal, and deſire, to know his truth: And in him, and by him, inceſſantly to ſeek, and liſten after the ſame; by the true Philoſophical method and harmony proceeding and aſcending, (as it were) gradatim, from things viſible, to conſider of things inviſible from things bodily, to conceive of things ſpirituall from things tranſitory, and momentary, to mediate of things permanent: by things mortall (viſible and inviſible) to have ſome perſeverance of immortality. And to conclude, moſt briefly; by the moſt mervailous frame of the whole World, philoſophically viewed, and circumſpectly weighed, numbred, and meaſured (according to the talent, and gift of G O D, from above alotted, for his divine purpoſes effecting) moſt faithfully to love, honor, and glorifie alwaies, the Framer, and Creator thereof. In whoſe workmanſhip, his infinite goodneſs, unſearchable wiſdome, and Almighty power, yea, his everlaſting power, and divinity, may (by innumerable means) be manifeſted, and demonſtrated. The truth of which my zealous, carefull, and conſtant intent, and endeavour ſpecified, may (I hope) eaſily appear by the whole, full and due ſurvey, and conſideration of all the Books, Treatiſes, and Diſcourſes, whoſe Titles onely, are, at this time, here annexed, and expreſſed: As they are ſet down in the ſixth Chapter, of another little Rhapſodicall Treatiſe, intituled, the Compendious Rehearſall, &c. written above two years ſince: for thoſe her Majeſties two honorable Comiſſioners; which her moſt excellent Majeſty had moſt graciouſly ſent to my poor Cottage in Mortclacke: to underſtand the matters, and cauſes at full; through which, I was ſo extreamly urged to procure at her Majeſties hands ſuch Honorable ſurveyors and witneſſes to be aſſigned, for the due proof of the contents, of my moſt humble and pitifull ſupplication, exhibited unto her moſt Excellent Majeſty, at Hampton Court, An 1592. Novemb. 9. Thus therefore (as followeth) is the ſaid 6. Chapter there, recorded.

¶ My labours and pains beſtowed at divers times, to pleaſure my native Countrey: by writing of ſundry BOOKS, and Treatiſes: ſome in Latine, ſome in Engliſh, and ſome of them, written, at her Majeſties commandement.

45. The Originals, and chief points, of our ancient Brytiſh Hiſtories, diſcourſed upon, and examined, An. 1583.

46. An adviſe & diſcourſe about the Reformation of the vulgar Julian yeare, written by her Majeſties commandement, and the Lords of the privy Councell, Anno 1582.

47. Certain Conſiderations, and conferrings together, of theſe three ſentences, (auncientl y accounted as Oracles(Noſce teipſum : Homo Homini Deus : Homo Homini Lupus, An. 1592

48. De hominis Corpore, Spiritu, & *A*nnima: ſive Microcoſmicum totius Philoſophiæ Naturalis Compendium, lib 1. Anno 1591.

With many other Books, Pamphlets, Diſcourſes, Inventions, and Concluſions, in divers Arts and matters: whoſe names, need not in this Abſtract to be notified: The moſt part of all which, here ſpecified, lie here before your Honours upon the Table, on your left hand. But by other books and Writings of another ſort, (if it ſo pleaſe God, and that he will grant me life, health, and due maintenance thereto, for ſome ten or twelve years next enſuing) I may, hereafter make plaine, and without doubt, this ſentence to be true, Plura làtent, quàm patent.

Thus far (my good Lord) have I ſet down this Catalogus, out of the foreſaid ſixt Chapter, of the booke, whoſe title is this:

49. The Compendious rehearſall of John Dee, his dutifull declaration and proofe of the courſe and race of his ſtudious life, for the ſpace of halfe an hundred years, now (by Gods favour and help) fully ſpent, &c.

To which compendious rehearſall, doth now belong an Appendix, of theſe two laſt years: In which I have had many juſt occaſions, to confeſſe, that Homo Homini Deus, and H*omo Homini Lupus*, was and is an Argument, worthy of the decyphering, and large diſcuſsing: as may, one day, hereafter (by Gods help) be publiſhed, in ſome manner very ſtrange. And beſides all the rehearſed Books & Treatiſes of my writiug, or handling hitherto, I have juſt cauſe, lately given me to write & publiſh a Treatiſe, with Title (50.) De Horizonte Æternitatis: to make evident, that one Andreas Libavius, in a book of his, printed the laſt year, hath unduly conſidered a phraſe of my Monas Hyeroglyphica:

gliphica: to his miſliking, by his own unskilfulneſſe in ſuch matter: and not underſtanding my apt application thereof, in one of the very principal places, of the whole Book. And this book of mine, by Gods help and favour (ſhall be dedicated unto her moſt Excellent Majeſty Royall: And this Treatiſe doth contain three books;

1. The firſt Intituled, De Horizonte: liber Mathematicus & Phyſicus.

2. The ſecond, De Æternitate: liber Theologicus, Metaphyſicus & Mathematicus.

3. The third, De Horizonte Æternitatis: liber Theologicus, Mathematicus, & Hierotechnicus.

It may now be here alſo remembred, that almoſt three years after the writing of this Letter, I did ſomewhat ſatisfie the requeſt of an Honourable Friend in Court, by ſpeedily penning ſome matter concerning her Majeſties Sea-Soveraigntie: under this title, 51. Thalattocratia Brytannica.

Sive,

De Brytanico Maris Imperio, Collectanea Extomporanea: 4. dierum Spacio, celeri conſcripta calamo. Anno. 1597. Septemb. 20. Manceſtriæ.

¶ Truly I have great cauſe to praiſe and thanke God, for your Graces very charitable uſing of me: both in ſundry points elſe, and alſo in your favourable yeelding to, yea & notifying the due means for the performance of her Sacred Majeſties moſt gracious and bountifull diſpoſition, reſolution, and very royall beginning, to reſtore and give unto me (her Ancient faithfull ſervant) ſome due maintenance to lead the reſt of my old daies, in ſome quiet and comfort: with habilitie, to retaine ſome ſpeedy, faire, and Orthographicall writers, about me; and the ſame skilfull in Latine and Greek (at the leaſt:) aſwell for my own books, and Works, fair, and correctly to be written (ſuch I mean, as either her moſt Excellent Majeſtie, out of the premiſſes will make choice of, or command to be finiſhed or publiſhed: or ſuch of them, as your grace ſhall think meet or worthy for my farther labor to be beſtowed on) as elſe for the ſpeedy, faire, and true writing out of other ancient Authors their good and rare workes, in greek or Latine: which by GODS Providence, have been preſerved from the ſpoile made of my Librarie, and of all my movable goods here, &c. Anno 1583. * In which Librarie, were about 4000. books; whereof, 700. were anciently written by hand; Some in Greeke, ſome in Latine, ſome in Hebrew, And ſome in other languages (as may by the whole Catalogus thereof appeare.) But the great loſſes and dammages which in ſundry ſorts I have ſuſtained, do not ſo much grieve my heart, as the raſh, lewde, fond, and moſt untrue fables, and reports of me, and my Studies Philoſophicall, have done, and yet do; which commonly, after their firſt hatching, and deviliſh deviſing, immediately with great ſpeed, are generally all the Realme overſpread; and to ſome, ſeem true; to other, they are doubtfull; and to onely the wiſe, modeſt, diſcreet, godly, and charitable (and chiefly to ſuch as have ſome acquaintance with me) they appear, and are known to be fables, untruths, and utterly falſe reports, and ſlanders. Well, this ſhall be my laſt charitable giving of warning, and fervent proteſtation to my Countreymen, and all other in this caſe;

* Although that my laſt voyage beyond the Seas, was duly undertaken (by her Majeſties good favour and licence) as by the ſame words may appear in the Letter, written by the Right Honourable Lord Treaſurer, unto your Grace in my behalf, and her moſt Excellent Majeſtie willing his Honor ſo to do. Anno. 1590. the 20. of January.

A fervent PROTESTATION.

Before the Almighty our GOD, and your Lordſhips good Grace, this day, on the perill of my ſouls damnation (if I lie, or take his name in vaine herein) I take the ſame GOD, to be my witneſſe; That with all my heart, with all my ſoul, with all my ſtrength, power and underſtanding (according to the meaſure thereof, which the Almighty hath given me) for the moſt part of the time, from my youth hitherto, I have uſed and ſtill uſe, good, lawfull, honeſt, chriſtian and divinely preſcribed means to attain to the knowledge of thoſe truthes, which are meet, and neceſſary for me to know; and wherewith to do his divine Majeſty ſuch ſervice, as he hath, doth, and will call me unto, during this my life: for his honour and glory advancing, and for the benefit, and commoditie publique of this Kingdome; ſo much, as by the will and purpoſe of God ſhall lie in my skill, and hability to perform: as a true, faithfull, and moſt ſincerely dutifull ſervant, to our moſt gracious and incomparable Queen Elizabeth, and as a very comfortable fellow-member of the body politique, governed under the ſcepter Royal of our earthly Supreame head (Queen Elizabeth*) and as a lively ſympathicall, and true ſymetricall fellow-member of that holy and myſticall body, Catholiquely extended and placed (whereſoever) on the earth: in the view,* Knowledge, direction, protection, illumination and conſolation of the Almighty, moſt Bleſſed, moſt holy, moſt glorious, comajeſticall, coeternall, and coeſſentiall Trinity: The Head of that Body, being only our Redeemer, Chriſt Jeſus, perfect God, and perfect man: whoſe return in glory, we faithfully awaite; and daily doe very earneſtly cry unto him, to haſten his ſecond comming for his elects ſake; iniquity doth ſo on this earth abound and prevaile, and true faith with Charity and Evangelicall ſimplicity, have but cold, ſlender and uncertain intertainment among the worldly-wiſe men of this world.

Therefore (herein concluding) I beſeech the Almighty God, moſt abundantly to increaſe and confirm your Graces heavenly wiſedome, and endue you with all the reſt of his heavenly gifts, for the relieving, refreſhing and comforting, both bodily and ſpiritually, his little flock of the faithfull, yet militant here on earth. Amen.

An EPILOGUE.

Good my Lord, I beſeech Your Grace, to allow of my plaine and comfortable Epilogus, for this matter at this time. 1. Seeing my ſtudious exerciſes, and converſation civill, may be abundantly teſtified, to my good credit, in the moſt parts of all Chriſtendome; and that by all degrees of Nobility, by all degrees of the Learned, and by very many other, of godly and Chriſtian diſpoſition, for the ſpace of 46. years triall: (as appeareth by the Records lately viewed by two honourable witneſſes, by Commiſſion from her Majeſtie;) 2. And ſeeing, for theſe 36. years laſt paſt, I have been her moſt Excellent Majeſties very true, faithfull and dutifull ſervant; at whoſe Royall mouth, I never received any one word of reproach; but all of favour, and grace: In whoſe Princely Countenance, I never perceived frowne toward me, or diſcontented regard, or view on me: but at all times favourable, and gracious: to the great joy and comfort of my true, faithfull, and loyall heart. And (thirdly) Seeing, the works of my hands, and words of my mouth (here before notified, in the Schedule of my books, and writings) may beare lively witneſſe of the thoughts of my heart, and inclination of my minde, generally, (as all wiſe men do know, and Chriſt himſelf doth avouch,) It might, in manner ſeem needleſſe, thus carefully (though moſt briefly and ſpeedily) to have warned or confounded the ſcornfull, the malicious, the proud, and the raſh in their untrue reports, opinions, and fables of my ſtudies, or exerciſes Philoſophicall: but that, it is of more importance, that the godly, the honeſt, the modeſt, the diſcreet, grave, and charitable Chriſtians (Engliſh or other,) lovers of Juſtice, truth, and good learning, may hereby receive certaine comfort in themſelves (to perceive, that Veritas tandem prævalebit) and ſufficiently be weaponed and armed with ſound truth, to defend me againſt ſuch kind of my adverſaries: hereafter they will begin afreſh or hold on obſtinately in their former errors, vain imaginations, falſe reports, and moſt ungodly ſlanders of me & my ſtudies. ¶ Therefore, (to make all this cauſe, for ever, before God & man, out of all doubt:) Seeing, your Lordſhips good grace, are, as it were, our high Prieſt, and chief Eccleſiaſticall Miniſter, (under our moſt dread and Soveraigne Lady Queen Elizabeth) to whoſe cenſure and judgement, I ſubmit all my ſtudies and Exerciſes; yea all my Books paſt, preſent, and hereafter to be written, by me (of my own skill, judgement, or opinion,) I do, at this preſent time, moſt humbly, ſincerely, and unfainedly, and in the name of Almighty God, (yea for his honour and glory) requeſt, and beſeech your Grace, (when, and as conveniently you may, to be well and throughly certified of me, what I am, Intus & in cute: Reverendiſſime in Chriſto Pater, & Digniſſime Archipræſul, cognòſce & agnoſce vultum tàm internum, quàm externum pecoris tui: And wherein I have uſed, do or ſhall uſe, pen, ſpeech, or converſation, otherwiſe then as it appertaineth to a faithfull, carefull, ſincere, and humble ſervant of Chriſt Jeſu, That your Grace would vouchſafe to advertiſe me. So, I truſt, Ultima reſpondebunt primis: in ſuch ſort, as this Authentick Record in Latine annexed (ad perpetuam rei memoriam) doth teſtifie: having never hitherto had occaſion to ſhew that, in any place of Chriſtendome: to teſtifie better of me, then they had proofe of me, themſelves, by my converſation among them. (The Almighty, therefore, be highly thanked, praiſed, honoured and glorified, for ever and ever, Amen.

But now, in reſpect of the generall intent of this briefe diſcourſe, I moſt humbly, and reverently, exhibit to your Graces view, and peruſing, the original monument, and authentick Record, before mentioned, fair written in Parchment, with the Seal whole, and perfect, duly appendant: as I have 45. years, and ſomewhat longer, preſerved it. The true Copy whereof, your Grace doth ſee, to be verbatim, as followeth.

Univerſis Sanctæ matris Eccleſiæ filijs, ad quos præſentes literæ perventuræ ſunt, Vicecancellarius Cætuſq; omnis Regentium & non Regentium, Univerſitatis Cantabrigiæ, Salutem in Domino ſempiternam. Conditiones & Merita hominum in noſtra Univerſitate ſtudentium, affectu ſincero perpendentes, eos ſolos teſtimonio noſtro ornandos eſſe arbitramur, quos ſcimus ob [illegible]ditionem, & morum probitatem promeritos eſſe, ut iſtud beneficium à nobis con[illegible]antur: Quamobrem, cùm hoc tempore ipſa veritas teſtimonium noſtrum ſibi poſtulat, veſtræ pietati, per has literas ſignificamus; Quòd dilectus nobis in Christo, Johannes Dee, Artium Magiſter, in dicta noſtra Univerſitate fœliciter verſatus; plurimam ſibi & doctrinæ & honeſtatis laudem comparavit: De cujus gradu, & converſatione (quæ honeſtiſſima ſemper fuit,) ne qua uſpiam ambiguitas, aut quæſtio oriri poſſit, apud eos, quibus hujus viri virtutes haud ſatis innotuerint, viſum eſt nobis, in dicti Johannis gratiam, has literas noſtras Teſtimoniales conſcribere; & conſcriptas, publico Academiæ noſtræ ſigillo, obſignare: quò, majorem apud vos authoritatem, & pondus literæ noſtræ habeant, Bene valete. Datum Cantabrigiæ, in plena Convocatione Magiſtrorum Regentium & non Regentium, Academiæ prædictæ: 14. Calend. Aprilis, Anno à Chriſto nato. 1548.

For certain due reſpects the very Image of the foreſaid Seal, is not here in portrature publiſh'd; the Moto Locus veri ſigilli.

PERORATIO.

THe Almighty and moſt mercifull God, the Father; for his only Son (our Redeemer) Jeſus Chriſt his ſake: by his holy Spirit, ſo direct, bleſſe, and proſper all my ſtudies, and exerciſes Philoſophicall, (yea, all my thoughts, words, and deeds thenceforward, even to the very moment of my departing from this world, That I may evidently and abundantly be found, and undoubtedly acknowledged of the Wiſe and Juſt, to have been a zealous and faithfull Student in the School of Verity, and an Ancient Graduate in the School of Charity: to the honour and glory of the ſame God Almighty; and to the ſound comfort and confirming of ſuch as faithfully love and fear his Divine Majeſtie, and unfainedly continue in labour to do good on earth: when, while, to whom, and as they may, Amen.

Very ſpedily written, this twelfth even, and twelfth day, in my poore Cottage, at Mortlake: Anno. 1595. currente à Nativitate Chriſti: aſi, An. 1594. Completo, à Conceptione ejuſdem, cum novem prætcrea menſibus, Completis.

Alwayes, and very dutifully, at your Graces commandement:

¶ Some drunken pranks of Kelley's, and why here recorded. ¶ A letter of the Spaniſh Embaſſadour his Secretary to Doctor Dee, whereby he doth ſignifie the Emperours deſire and appointment, to have him come to him. Octavius Spinola,

Chamber-

Chamberlain, &c. brings him to him. An account of what was ſaid on both ſides. Doctor Dee's Monas, (of which, ſee more in the Preface :) his Revelations and Viſions : His Angelical Stone, &c.

¶ XCV p. 231. Kelly's former miſcarriage taken notice of : the cauſe of it : It is forgiven. Doctor Dee, &c. Their Office magnified. Kingdomes of the Earth to be deſtroyed. Hieruſalem reſtored. Chriſt to Reigne. Other Predictions, very ſtrange, (but not true) and the certain year. Rodolph. Emperour, to be exalted. Stephen King of Poland, to be deſtroyed. Enoch's Tables. Doctor Dee his Prayer, and Kelley's Vow.

¶ Doctors Dee's Letter to Octavius Spinola, to be communicated to the Emperour : but not delivered at that time, by reaſon of the Emperour his abſence.

¶ XCVI p. 235. Ga. Za. Vaa : ſpirits invited : that is, called upon by Doctor Dee : their anſwer interpreted by him.

¶ The former Letter, (with ſome alterations) delivered, and the Emperours very gracious anſwer to it, by the ſaid Spinola. Doctor Curtzius, a Doctor of the Laws, one of the Emperours Privy Council ; accounted very Learned : appointed by the Emperour to deal with Doctor Dee, in his behalf.

¶ XCVII p. 237. Doctor Dee asketh counſell, (of God, he thought :) but firſt encountereth with Piloſus, (an evil ſpirit : שעיר as I take it :) and his temptations. Ed. Kelley very penitent ſtill, but deſirous, (as unfit) to be out of his Office. The ſpirits appear. Reconciliation : twofold : (with God, with the Church, &c. Purgatory. The body of Chriſt, The caſe of Rodolph. Emperour, in caſe he obey, or diſobey. The ſpirit of Choice in Doctor Dee, explained. Doctor Curtz allowed of.

¶ p. 239. Doctor Curtz, and Doctor Dee, (after ſome Complements by Meſſengers.) meet. Their conference of ſix hours. Doctor Dee's Relation of himſelf , his Studies, his Suite ; (and therein, though not apprehended by himſelf, his intollerable preſumption , pride, high opinion of himſelf, &c.) Revelations , Books, and wonderfull confidence ; as of moſt, that are ſo deluded.

¶ XCVIII p. 240. Lying : and froward ſilence : not ordinarily expounded. Reconciliation to the Church. The ſin againſt the Holy Ghoſt : what it is. Complaints , and Propheſies againſt the Emperour, and Doctor Curtz, becauſe of their infidelity, and diſobedience. Doctor Dee in high favour : England given to him, and for his ſake , not deſtroyed : Yet the Crown there, to be transferred, &c. Doctor Dee warranted, and commanded to write to the Emperour, that he could make the Philoſophers Stone : though, yet, he could not, but is promiſed it ; and the gift of healing : (which diver Enthuſiaſts have boaſted of ; and if they have done any thing really, there is no queſtion but they have done it by the help of ſpirits. How ſafe therefore it is to go unto ſuch, let men conſider.) Ed. Kelley prayes for Doctor Curtz his ſudden death, but not heard.

¶ XCIX p. 243. The ſame Commiſſion, here again, about the Philoſophers Stone : and the Emperour, here alſo threatned : and another (Erneſtus) aſſigned to his place. Reported here to be poſſeſſed by a Devil.

¶ C p. 244 Doctor Dee, comforted and confirmed by his ſpirits , againſt ſlanders, and evill reports : out of Scripture, &c. ¶ The ſpirits here, ſeem to allude to a paſſage of the Sibyls Verſes, (a counterfeit Book :) as Doctor Dee doth obſerve at laſt, to agree with it. They tell Doctor Dee he ſhall be with the Emperour in ſpight of the Devil : (ſo they can play upon themſelves, when they liſt, to fool men :) but did not ſay true, and in that ſhewed themſelves very Devils ; and that Doctor Dee might have underſtood, had not his underſtanding been ſo blinded and captivated by them.

¶ Doctor Dee invited to Dinner, by the Spaniſh Embaſſadour : who, among other things, profeſſeth himſelf to be deſcended of Raymundus Lullius : that this Raym. L. (if we may believe him) by a retired ſolitude, without Books : (the way commended by the late Method alſo : but indeed the moſt ready way to put men out of their wits :) of an ignorant illiterate man, became very learned : and that he had the Philoſophers Stone : whereupon he doth conclude and build, that which Doctor Dee related of himſelf, his viſions, and revelations, &c. might be as poſſible, and true. The Emperour, by him commended.

¶ p. 246. The ſecond Letter, written by Doctor Dee to the Emperour. His confidence as great as ever ; and particularly concerning the Philoſophers Stone, which he doth here promiſe to the Emperour, (being ſo perſwaded by his ſpirits, though as yet, as ignorant of it, as ever.)

¶ Doctor Dee at Dinner again with the Spaniſh Embaſſadour.

¶ Ed. Kelley troubleſome : Doctor Dee's confidence in God, and great penury.

¶ p. 247. Dr. Dee viſited by Dr. Curtz, at his own houſe. His complaints: Dr. Curtz account of the Emperour (his Maſter) preſent apprehenſions of this buſineſs: Some Mathematical Books written by Dr. Dee, and Commandinus (a very famous man)&c.

¶ p. 248. Another Letter of Doctor Dee's to the Spaniſh Embaſſadour. His wonderfull confidence, declining (wiſely : his ſpirits had ſo inſtructed him,) the teſt of humane reaſon. (roſtris, for mentis to be corrected, here.) ¶ An account, (in a Poſtſcript) of his laſt conference with Dr. Curtz.

¶ CI p. 249. After a ſwelling Preface , (fitted for the Scene , and Auditours) a long diſcourſe (upon occaſion of Doctor Dee his Wiſe's ſickneſſe :) of true Phyſick , and the cauſes of diſeaſes: much ſavouring (whereof more in the Preface*:) of* Paracelſus his ſtyle, and ſpirits. Rare ſtuff, moſt part of it, for a Quack.

¶ CII p. 252. CIII p. 253. The ſame matter proſecuted, and particularly applyed to Jane Dee, (the wife of Dr. Dee, ) her preſent eaſe: Her Diſeaſe: and the Remedy.

¶ CIV p. 253. Doctor Dee reproved, as not ſenſible enough of what God had done for him: which is pompouſly ſet out by the Spirits. Money not to be expected from theſe ſpirits, who nevertheleſſe promiſed them (after a while) great plenty of all things: power to make, and marre, whom they pleaſe, &c. Ed. Kelley reproved for contriving how to ſteal away: Al. Lasky to prevail againſt his enemies.

¶ Another meeting of Doctor Curtz, and Doctor Dee's. The Emperours Anſwer, (by Doctor Curtz*) to ſome paſſages of* Doctor Dee's meſſage, delivered unto him, as from God. Doctor Dee doth interpret himſelf. Accepts of the Emperours profer, to do him good, &c. ¶ Dr. Curtz and Doctor Dee, together again: but no account of his two Letters to the Emperour yet given. Mathematical inventions, of Doctor Curtz, &c. ¶ A draught for a Paſſe, to be obtained of the Emperour for Doctor Dee, &c. Doctor Dee takes notice of the reſpects of two Spaniſh Embaſſadours, and another great Man, done to him pablickly. ¶ The account of ſome two moneths, from 8 Octob. 1584. to Decemb. 20. are wanting.

¶ p. 353. Their ſecond arrival to Prage. Doctor Dee's Letter to the Spaniſh Embaſſadour; His wonderful progreſſe (as he thought) in high myſteries and revelations, &c.

¶ His houſe there. ¶ p. 354. Doctor Dee's Letter to Doctor Curtz: (one of the Emperours privy Council, &c. as before,) Complaint of aſperſions, (& minis: not nimis, as printed:) Profeſſion of good intentions towards the Emperour, &c.

¶ CV p. 355. (ad 361.) Long parabolical, ænigmatical Apparitions; (which Doctor Dee did not like very well, nor underſtand; as appeareth by p. 361.) and ſome wild Doctrines, of the fear of the Lord; innocency, ſanctification in Chriſt, &c. cabaliſtically ſet out. The Philoſophers Stone, promiſed to the Emperour by Doctor Dee.

¶ CVI p. 361. Gods myſteries not to be diſpenced but by degrees, &c. The Philoſophers Stone, a great myſtery.

¶ CVII p. 362. A Progreſſe in the Corbale. Oppoſition as before. The Leſſon (ſee p. 387.) out of the Book of Enoch.

¶ CXI and CXII p. 367. A further Progreſſe. The myſteries of that worthy Leſſon highly ſet out, and ſome kind of expoſition of it: but as Ed. Kelley rightly judged, ignotum per ignotius. Reverence required. Doctor Dee in a ſwound. An illuſion, (ſo pretended.)

¶ CXIII p. 367. Doctor Dee, &c. excepted againſt, as unworthy, becauſe of their ſins, and unthankfulneſſe, for ſo many mercies. Another, (whomſoever Doctor Dee would chuſe) upon certain cautions and conditions, to be ſubſtituted in Ed. Kelley's place. Doctor Dee's ſorrow, and humble requeſt about the Philoſophers Stone. His deſire to be inſtructed (by his ſpirits) about the Sacrament of the Lords Supper. The myſtery of it cabaliſtically unfolded. The Trinity, Adam's fall, Chriſt's Incarnation. The Doctrine of Tranſubſtantiation: Of receiving under one kind: Of adoration of the Euchariſt: But receiving of it, not allowed.

¶ CXVI p. 375. Doctor Dee very earneſt for the ſecret of the Philoſophers Stone, ſo often promiſed: but eluded with Sermon-like ſtuff of reproof: of patience, afflictions; worthy partaking; Confeſſion, &c.

¶ CXVII p. 378. Doctor Dee himſelf heareth, and feeleth. More reproofes. Doctor Dee to prevail againſt his enemies: but commanded ſpeedily to go for Prague, to prevent Impriſonment, &c.

¶ CXIX ibid. They begin their journey; but by an Apparition in the way, after ſome goodly promiſes made to Doctor Dee, for his obedience: and Predictions (all falſe) of judgements upon the Emperour, and exaltation of Stephen King of Poland, &c. they are commanded to return back again, and to return to Prague. ¶ Which done, Doctor Dee's Child is chriſtened, ſome of the chiefeſt in the Emperours Court being Godfathers, and Godmothers.

¶ CXX p. 382. The Prophets of old times ſummoned: why viſited, &c. The eternal generation of Chriſt, the Son of God, Platonically ſet out. Divine Neceſſity, the cauſe of all things: Election: Perſeverance, &c. Earneſt expoſtulations, and exhortations. Chriſt again: The Church Militant, and Triumphant. Doctor Dee and Ed. Kelley much taken with this goodly ſtuff, and confirmed in their Errour.

¶ p. 387. The pretious Leſſon, before ſpoken of, of revealing the ſecret of the Philoſophers Stone.

¶ CXXI p. 388. The Leſſon, and ſome obſcure words of it, expreſſed in Engliſh. Ed. Kelley, deſirous to be rid of his office.

¶ CXXII p. 389. Jane Dee (Doctor Dee's wife) her earneſt and humble Petition to God, (ſo the poor woman thought) and his Angels, for relief in her great neceſſity. The Petition anſwered, firſt with reproof; but commendation, and promiſes, afterwards. The ſpirit confeſſeth, he had no power to procure them money: but inſtead of it, pretends to give them good counſel, counſel, to get out of Prage ſpeedily, &c.

¶ A Record of a hot conflict between Doctor Dee, and Ed. Kelley, about ſome Magical papers: in which conflict Doctor Dee thought himſelf in danger of his life, and was fame to cry out for help.

¶ CXXIII p. 391. An Apparition fitted for the occaſion. The fault of Ed. Kelley's refractorineſſe, laid upon the malice and envy of the Devil, and ſome places of Eſdras, applied to that purpoſe, Ed. Kelley rebuked; but comforted and confirmed with a promiſe of no evil ſpirit to be ſuffered to trouble him henceforth: and many good exhortations: with a Parable alſo to that purpoſe. ¶ Some queſtions propoſed by Doctor Dee, who is referred to the Book of Enoch ¶ CXXIV p. 395. Doctor Dee, &c. ſharply reproved for not fulfilling the command of a ſpeedy departure, with more expedition. He acknowledgeth (convicted by ſome plauſible conſiderations,) his fault, and prayeth fervently.

¶ CXXV p. 396. The Stone ſhut up for twenty dayes. Their journey (from Prage, to Cracovia:) and in the way, ſtrange whirlewinds. Some ſtrife about their houſe. Al. Lasky, by whom Doctor Dee is brought to the King: (ſuſtinem, for ſiſterem, to be corrected, &c.) delivers his Commiſſion, &c. He receives the Communion: ſo doth Ed. Kelley.

¶ CXXVII ibid. Superſtitious prayers (by appointment of ſpirits) to the Angels, Governours of Kingdoms and Nations. Stephen (King of Poland) greatly in favour (with God) and to be the Miniſter of great things.

Doctor Dee doth apprehend, (which Kelley doth often profeſſe to have found in himſelf) that the ſpirits knew his thoughts.

¶ Ed. Kelley, very unquiet, and blaſphemous: Yet confirmed again, by ſome Apparitions; to Doctor Dee's great comfort, who ſtill (very devoutly and innocently, had not he brought this grievous deluſion upon himſelf, by tempting God ſo grievouſly:) doth ſubmit unto, and comfort himſelf in God.

¶ CXXVIII p. 400. Apparitions in the preſence of Al. Lasky. Promiſes to Doctor Dee, and to King Stephen. Al. Lasky upon conditions to be received into favour again. ¶ Doctor Dee receives the Communion again.

¶ CXXIX p. 401. Apparitions at the Court of the King of Poland, in the preſence of Al. Lasky, (one of the Princes Palatine of the Country) who is offered by the ſpirits, ſudden deſtruction of the King, (if he deſire it,) or to ſee him ſtruck with Leproſie; or otherwiſe corrected, if ſo rather. Al. Lasky his pious and religious anſwer, and choice: for which he is commended. The ſpirits will not endure, though requeſted, to deal with the King, in the Hungarian Tongue. They promiſe to ſpeak to him in Latine. A good bleſſing, and formall abſolution, pronounced by evill ſpirits.

¶ CXXX p. 402. ¶ Doctor Dee, &c. brought to Stephen, (King of Poland,) who upon ſome conditions, is willing to be preſent: yet makes an objection out of Scripture, as not fully ſatisfied that theſe apparitions, &c. were from God. To which Doctor Dee makes an accurat anſwer: (by which it doth appear, that either he had ſtudied the caſe very well, or was helped as other reall Enthuſiaſts, by his ſpirits:) but very full of faults in the Copy, and ſo printed. More here, I think, then in all the Latine of the Book beſides. We take notice of it in the Errata.

¶ In the Action, or Apparition, King Stephen, ſharply reproved for his ſins. But upon condition of repentance, and ſubmiſſion to God (in this way) the Kings of the earth (intoxicati calice Meretricis: a phraſe often uſed in this Book: that is drunk with the cup of the Whore,) are to do homage unto him; and he, (right Anabaptiſme,) to work ſtrange execution, &c. Very lofty language, here uſed: Fige pedem in Aquil. &c.

¶ XXXI p. 406. Sad complaint, (as from God) of incredulity: The Incarnation of Chriſt, and thereby priviledge of Chriſtians above the Iſraelits, Tears. Doctor Dee, ſent with an errand to King Stephen: and a direct promiſe, and profer of the Philoſophers Stone.

¶ Doctor Dee delivers his errand in Latin: (but here our records, I know not by what chance, are very defective. King Stephen, it ſeems did not prove ſo credulous, as was expected.)

¶ CXXXII p. 408 The ſpirits are angry, and command all to be ſhut up, for a ſeaſon, till further order. (the account of ſome moneths is wanting.)

¶ CXXXIII p. 409. The power of God. The Jewes, and Jeruſalem to be reſtored. And now, one Francis Puccius (a Florentine, a zealous and learned Papiſt,) being entertained, and admitted to theſe ſecrets: with great hopes of ſome good to be done by this fellowſhip: Rome alſo being deſigned henceforth for the Scene: (ſee p. 417.) the ſpirits apply themſelves, and fit their ſpeech to this end and occaſion. The interpretation of Scriptures The Fathers. The Church. Luther and Calvin, condemned. The Pope of Rome, cannot be (ſay the ſpirits) the Antichriſt: and think they prove it. Exhortations to return to the Church: and a form of Prayer, or Thankſgiving, to that purpoſe. In the concluſion, the ſpirits apply themſelves to Puccius, perſonally: He is to rebuke the preſent Pope, (here called, a wicked Monſter,) againſt whom, if he will not be perſwaded, terrible judgements are denounced. ¶ The ſame Action (becauſe the ſpirits here rather choſe to ſpeak Engliſh, than Latine: whereof of ſomewhat is ſaid in the Preface : in Latine by Doctor Dee.

¶ CXXXIV p. 417. The ſumme of Francis Puccius his commiſſion, in high Language. Future Actions, in Rome. ¶ But here followeth a hiatus of ſome 6 moneths : which bereaves us of many particulars. In the mean time happened the ſentence of baniſhment againſt Doctor Dee, by the Popes mediation and authority ; (as his Nuncio, p. 431. doth acknowledge) and ſo brake the purpoſe of going to Rome : though much driven on by Puccius, &c. as will appear.

¶ p. 418. Doctor Dee's record of a ſtrange thing, (a very miracle, in his judgement,) that hapned in his preſence, and ſight ; to wit, Books that had been burned by him, (or in his ſight) reſtored unto him whole and entire, by ſpirits, &c.

¶ CXXXV p. 419 Prince Roſimberg (you may ſee his Titles p. 425.) called, and admitted into the Society, to be partaker of the Myſteries ; and the Executioner of (ſo ſuppoſed) Gods judgements, &c. ¶ Prince Roſimberg, upon relation of what had been revealed, concerning himſelf, accepts of it thankfully : promiſes amendment, and prayes for the Emperour, (whoſe Vice-Roy he was in Bohemia, &c.) that he may not be deſtroyed, but repent rather.

¶ Doctor Dee's Journey to Leipſig. ¶ His Letter to Sir Francis Walſingham , Secretary to Queen Elizabeth : wherein is obſervable his wonderfull confidence ; and vain boaſting, (though not without ſome grounds :) as a very Enthuſiaſt, and deluded man : though it cannot be denied, that ſome Enthuſiaſts, upon leſſe grounds, (when God hath been pleaſed to give way) have had far better ſucceſſe.

¶ p. 424. One Jul. Aſcanius, his Letter to Doctor Dee, informing him of ſome reports, and attempts againſt him in Germany, as a Necromancer, &c.

¶ p. 425. A Letter of Doctor Dee's to Prince Roſimberg, complaining of thoſe reports, and attempts, by the Nuncio, &c.

¶ p. 429. Prince Roſimberg his queſtions and petitions , miraculouſly (as was conceived) anſwered. A white paper being ſet upon the Altar, whileſt Maſſe was ſaid : the ſaid paper after Maſſe, was found all written, and as ſoon as copied out, all the Letters of it vaniſhed. A Copy of the ſaid paper, or (miraculous) writing.

¶ ibid. Some obſervations of Doctor Dee's, upon Francis Puccius (of whom before) his carriage ; whereby it did appear unto him, that the ſaid Puccius did not deal truely and ſincerely : which troubled Doctor Dee, who much deſired to be rid of him.

¶ p. 430. A conflict of his, with the ſaid Puccius, about their going to Rome, &c.

¶ p. 431. A Paper delivered by Puccius, to Doctor Dee, as from the Nuncio ; by which they are abſolved from all crimes, (were they never ſo great and hainous) ſo they will go to Rome. Puccius his inconſtancy about that Paper. ¶ Doctor Dee's Letter to the ſaid Nuncio , upon that occaſion : wherein, among other things, to tell him of theſe Books that had been burned, and were (miraculouſly) reſtored ; and of many more burned (part of theſe Records certainly) not yet reſtored, but promiſed and expected. ¶ The ſaid Letter after ſome conteſt about it, committed to Puccius, to be carried and delivered. ¶ More of Puccius his not faithful dealing. Some Hereſies alſo of his. Some other things, laid to his charge by Doctor Dee.

¶ p. 434. The Popes Nuncius, his anſwer to Doctor Dee : grave, and courteous. (At the beginning of it, aut, for autem to be corrected)

¶ p. 435. A Paper, (here inſcribed and ſtiled, Oraculum Divinum) in Kelly's abſence, written and delivered (as Doctor Dee doth here record :) by ſpiritual and divine means : the drift whereof is, to confirm Prince Roſimberg. At whoſe requeſt, the ſentence of baniſhment is mitigated.

¶ p. 436. A long and ſubmiſſive Letter of Francis Puccius, to Doctor Dee, &c. where, among other things, he gives him a very punctual account of what had paſſed, in diſcourſe, between the Popes Nuncius, and himſelf, concerning their cauſe, apparitions, high attempts, &c. (well worth the reading.) His encounter with a Jeſuit, before the ſaid Nuncio. What account Prince Roſimberg , and ſome other great men, made of them.

¶ CXXXVI p. 444. ¶ CXXXVII p. 445. Apparitions in the Stone, (after 6 moneths intermiſſion) renewed, with expreſſions of great devotion, in Doctor Dee : but with many Woes and threatnings, by the ſpirits : who neverthelſſe, Prince Roſimberg being preſent, promiſe fair to him, and give him ſome inſtructions, how to carry himſelf.

¶ Francis Puccius very troubleſome ; but at laſt quieted with the reſtitution (Doctor Dee, at this time, abounded with money, 2000 Ducats in one bag : Prince Roſimberg had a good purſe?) of 800. Florens : which the ſaid Puccius had formerly contributed for the ſervice.

¶ CXXXVIII p. 448. Doctor Dee makes bold to propoſe ſome queſtions (tending to the ſecret of the Philoſopher's Stone ; as I take it :) out of ſeaſon ; but is rejected, and doth humbly ſubmit.

THE CONTENTS OF THE SECOND PART.

Part II.

A*Ction* I.p. 1. Sermon-like ſtuff : Doctor Dee (having a zeal, but not according to knowledge) mervailouſly affected with it. Prince Roſimberg his expectation of money anſwered, and eluded with great ſubtilty, by example out of Scripture, of Abraham, David, Solomon, &c. The precious Powder he had, how and when, to be uſed. Judgements to be executed upon ſeveral Great ones, (ſure enough if they had prevailed) by Prince Roſimberg, as from God. Ed. Kelley, his Wife barren : why. He very weary of his office : reproved for it, and another (Arthur, Doctor Dee's ſon,) to be ſubſtituted in his place : yea, and his portion of the precious Powder to be taken from him, if he do not repent.

II. p. 4. Arthur, firſt preſented, and prepared by Prayer, &c. enters upon his Office : Seeth divers things in the Stone; Lions, Men, &c. but heareth not.

III. p. 5. Arthur again, as before : Three Exerciſes in one day.

IV. p. 7. Arthur again, as before : in two Exerciſes more.

V. p. 8. Ed. Kelley, in his Office again : ſees and hears, as before. Uriel, firſt authour of Doctor Dee's and Ed. Kelley's conjunction. A New Law promiſed here again. Anabaptiſtical Doctrine of committing Adultery, for Gods ſake,&c. ¶ Of ſome words here, ſee the Errata.

VI. p. 9. Here the ſpirits begin to ſhew themſelves in their own likeneſſe apparently, teaching doctrines of Devils : and yet ſtill (as their inſtruments at this day in divers places) in the name of God. Doctor Dee and Ed. Kelley, are exhorted, yea commanded, to have their Wives in common. The caſe argued on both ſides ſtiffly and eagerly. Other ſtrange Doctrine of Devils, (noted, and rejected in the Preface*) of* murder condemned by the Laws of men, approved by God. Saint Paul impiouſly ſlandered. Great promiſes, in caſe of obedience. The Powder. The Pope here accurſed : yet Popery elſewhere juſtified. Kelley ſcandalized : Doctor Dee in great Agony. Some ſecrets of diſtillation revealed by ſpirits. The Powder again, and how E. K. came by it. Predictions of England, &c. (all falſe and fooliſh) Ed. Kelley his fidelity ſuſpected. Cabaliſtical myſteries of Letters, and Numbers : not well underſtood by Doctor Dee, &c. though much helped by his ſpirits. But at laſt, he hath joy, (in ſpirit as he is perſwaded) and reſolves to obey.

¶ Doctor Dee, Ed. Kelley, and their two Wives, their ſenſe, apprehenſions, and reſolutions, concerning this new doctine of promiſcuous copulation enjoyned : expreſſed in form of a Covenant (ſo by them called) with God : here firſt exhibited, and afterwards, p. 20. compleated, and ſubſcribed by the Parties : ¶ with a moſt wicked clauſe, or concluſion, of dreadful imprecations to all that ſhould hereafter come to the knowledge of it, or bring it to knowledge : whereas it is much to the glory of God, and true Religion, that ſuch myſteries of Hell and darkneſſe, ſhould come to light, to be abhorred by all men : and that others may be warned by ſuch ſad examples, not to hunt after new doctrines, and pretended inſpirations and revelations.

¶ p. 17. Ed. Kelley his Declaration of his diſlike, from the beginning of theſe Actions, in generall : His oppoſition upon occaſion. His diſlike of this new doctrine (in particular) as contrary to the revealed Will of God : how ſatisfied in ſome meaſure : and thereupon his readineſſe to obey. But upon the womens profeſſed diſlike, and demurre, reſolves to give over all further dealing.

VII. p. 19. Apparitions. The chief Stone carried away by ſpirits in their ſight. More exhortations and arguments, for compliance to this new doctrine. Offer of a Miracle, for further confirmation.

VIII. p. 21. Another Apparition (upon requeſt made) to confirm them in their purpoſe of obedience.

IX. p. 22. Yet another to the ſame purpoſe. The Covenant torne by Kelley, made whole again by ſpirits. The great power of God : faith and obedience, dience, the main thing. Great promiſes. Judgements pronounced againſt Kelley his tearing the paper of Covenant. Againſt others, (ſome already executed) for enticing him away: By which it ſeems Kelley being terrified, reſolves to tarry, and obey. ¶ The Stone, ſtrangely taken away, as ſtrangely reſtored, in the preſence and ſight of both.

X The Act of obedience (good words, to countenance greateſt villanies, never wanted: as dayly ſeen:) performed, is accepted by ſhews and ſpeeches. Commendation of Wiſdom. Secrecy enjoyned.

XI Cabaliſtical Doctrine, of the Creation of man: The ſoul of man, not the ſubject of ſanctification, &c. Great Promiſes and Predictions: (equally true) entertained, (with the Doctrine:) with comfort.

¶ p. 28. Prince Roſimberg: (the man now in favour: but miſerably abuſed and deluded:) two Letters of his to Doctor Dee, &c. Several queſtions by him propoſed, as expecting great things; and wholly to be governed by their ſpirits. His confidence of a great Treaſure, in the Powder delivered unto him.

¶ p. 30. Several Queſtions, and Petitions of Doctor Dee's upon the former Propoſition, &c. to be offered unto God: among the reſt, one for the making of the Philoſophers Stone: Another, for Kelley's being ſick: for his Wife, being barren: for his own Wife ſick, &c. The Emperour of Moſcovie, his great opinion of Doctor Dee, and favour offered.

¶ But here followeth that great hiatus, or interruption of Story, which bereaves us of many years (ſpoken of in the Preface:) account. All from hence, to the end, ſet out unto us but the ſad and lamentable Cataſtrophie of this long Deluſion. Kelley is no more heard of now; yet the ſpirits appear ſtill in the ſame ſhape, as before.

¶ An. Dom. 1607. (Stylo Jul.) Martii 20.
By this time Doctor Dee was become a very old man: If he were Sexagenarius (as he is ſtiled in Puccius his Letter, P. I. 439. l. 15.) a. d. 1586. he muſt needs be fourſcore and upwards by this: But we need not take the word ſo preciſely: However if towards it then, (more or leſſe) he muſt be very old now, as I ſaid before.

THE CONTENTS OF THE THIRD PART.

Part III.

ACtion I. p. 32. Raphael (pretended) ſent unto Doctor Dee, to comfort him, being (beſides old Age) much afflicted with poverty and ſickneſſe.

II p. 33. The ſame Raphael. Of a certain Treaſure ſomewhere under ground, (as was ſuppoſed.) Doctor Dee's queſtions rather eluded, than really anſwered. Put-offs, and Promiſes, (of wonderful Wiſdom, &c.) ſtill.

III ibid. A Voice ſent to Doctor Dee, then (as it ſeemeth) alone.

IV p. 34. Raphael again: who, with many fair pretenſes, and very forcible Rhetorick (to ſuch a one as Doctor Dee) doth deliver a meſſage unto him, of a Journey into a far Country, to be undertaken by him in this his miſerable caſe and condition, of purſe and body, through years, and preſent ſickneſſe.

The danger of his diſobedience herein, and reward of obedience; the Philoſophers Stone, &c. Doctor Dee is willing. (O rare faith: or rather prodigious, but deſerved infatuation!) Salisbury, and his Devils; if the Devil may be believed.

¶ p. 36. Some Caſes and Queſtions propoſed, and to be propoſed.

¶ It ſeems Doctor Dee, at this time, took upon him to be a Cunning-man. His neceſſity which was great, might put him to it to try all means: but I think he was too honeſt to thrive by it.

V p. 39.

V p. 39. The ſame Raphael. Some queſtions (I doubt, how truly) reſolved about the Treaſure. The Journey haſtened. The Hiſtory of Tobias.

VI p. 40. Raphael in the Stone : The Jewel ; the Powder : in Doctor Dee's poſſeſſion ; but not yet of uſe to him. His thankfulneſſe, (good man.)

VII p. 41. Raphael again in the Stone. The Journey. Great Promiſes of Wiſdom, &c. Doctor Dee's enemies at Court. Money intended by the Emperour (ſo alſo p. 38.) to Doctor Dee, hindered. Some Caſes, concerning others, and himſelf, at his requeſt anſwered.

VIII p. 43. Raphael : Divers Queſtions and Caſes by him anſwered. One John Pontoys, very ambitious to ſerve Doctor Dee, in theſe Apparitions. ¶ Which end here in our Relation : and probably, with his life : or at leaſt, (though his ſpirits had promiſed him, p. 34. addition of many years) not long before his death. I cannot yet learn the direct time of his death : but much about this time, (by all reports :) and in England, certainly. Though his ſin was very great (as in the Preface is ſhewed :) yet becauſe of his ſimple and ſincere intentions towards God, it may charitably be hoped, that God was ſo merciful to him, as to let him know his errour, and to repent of it, before his death.

¶ p. 46. That which follows here, is certainly intended for part of that holy Language, which Adam in Paradiſe is ſaid P. I p. 64, 92. to have ſpoken : and by which great wonders might be wrought. I have neither faith, nor curioſity to inquire into it any further : neither will, (I think) any ſober man.

INſtead of other Approbation : the Reader (beſides the judgement of the late Arch-Biſhop of Armagh : for his Piety and Learning ſo famous every where ; ſpoken of in the Preface, firſt page of it : and the judgement of divers others, that read the Book Manuſcript, and wiſhed it printed :) may conſider, how ſollicitous the Devil hath been, when he ſaw his plots (God oppoſing) not likely to take effect ; that theſe Myſteries (theſe Papers and Records) might not come to light. Firſt, by p. 418. and p. 431. (Doctor Dee's Letter to the Popes Nuncio) and ſome other places of the Book, it doth appear, that they were all burnt, by command ; though ſome afterwards (upon appearance of better hopes) ſtrangely reſtored again. Again, Part II p. 21. is that horrible imprecation ; whereof more in the Table. Laſtly, theſe remaining Papers and Records, here exhibited, were under ground, God knows how long : and ſince that, though carefully preſerved, were even at the very laſt, when the worthy Owner took care, and was at the coſt to have them tranſcribed : and ſo at the laſt, (not unluckily, I hope for the publick good :) they fell into my hands.

ERRATA: Thoſe of the Book.

MAny will be found in the Book: a good part proceeding (beſides ordinary typographical miſtakes, even where beſt care is uſed:) from the uncorrectedneſſe of the Copy: which might happen partly through the illegibleneſſe of the Original it ſelf, in many places: and partly from miſtakes in the ſaid Original, where moſt legible. The cauſe of which miſtakes and miſwriting, you may find P. I. p. 159 l. 20. &c. and beſides what is there ſaid, it may be probably collected from P. II. p. 27. l. 43. and p. 23. l. 20. and ſome other like places that Ed. Kelley, for the moſt part, when he made report to Doctor Dee, of voices and ſpeeches, (ſuch eſpecially as were of ſome length) did not know what he ſaid himſelf, and ſo might the eaſier miſtake. A good part of the Greek, P. I. p. 27. was miſreported, and miſtaken, as is ſhewed in the Preface p. . . .) and I believe never throughly underſtood by Doctor Dee himſelf: It cannot therefore be expected otherwiſe, but that there ſhould be many faults in the writing: for which I would not have the innocent (the Printers and Correctors, I mean:) to bear more blame, than comes to their ſhare. Yet however, though many: moſt are ſuch (thoſe places excepted where the Original was very faulty:) as may eaſily be corrected by an ordinary Reader that is converſant in books of all kinds: Or if not ſo eaſily corrected yet ſuch as will not bereave the Reader of the main ſenſe and matter. Some few paſſages here and there, it may be, will be found where a reaſonable Scholar may be put to it: as P. II. p. 9. l. 11. alas vobiſmet ipſis diſimpertiis: which certainly muſt be read, alas vobiſmet ipſis diſimpertitis: there being a manifeſt (and pertinent) alluſion, in the words, to that allegorical πτεροφυΐα (wing-breeding: or, bearing:) of the ſoul, ſo famous in the Books of Philoſophers; Platoniſts eſpecially. That very expreſſion is to be found in Plato, (or Works commonly aſcribed unto him:) not πτεροῤῥυεῖν onely and πτερὰ ἀποβάλλειν: (which is the ſame in effect:) but even πτερὰ θραύεσθαι: alas confringere, as it is here. Some ſuch places here and there, may be found, where the Reader muſt take ſome time to conſider, (in what is Latine, eſpecially:) if he think it worth the while. I have ſaid as much as I think needful, and my leiſure will afford me at this time.

¶ Since this written, obſerving that p. 403, 404. the Latine there in both pages, is very full of faults, (far more there, than any where elſe, that I have obſerved:) I thought it would not be amiſſe to correct thoſe two pages. The Reader may the better know what he hath to do upon ſuch occaſions, though I dare ſay he will not meet with the like again in the whole Book.
